THE FRENCH CIVIL WAR.

Consternation Prevailing in Paris—Prussian Forces Ordered to be Ready to March to the City—Further Particulars of the Fighting on Monday and Tuesday—Official Statement of the Results.

LONDON, April 5.—The Times' special dispatch from Versailles states that 15,000 insurgents have been taken prisoners; that Paris is in consternation, and that the people of Versailles are greatly irritated against the insurgents. The Telegraph's correspondent says the First Prussian Army Corps has been ordered to hold itself ready to march to Paris. The reign of terror continues within the city.

Dr. JOHN SWINBURNE, of the American Ambulance Corps, is seriously ill.

The Daily News' special says the Nationals attacked the Government troops on Tuesday, near Meudon, and suffered a complete rout. GARIBALDI declines the command of the insurgents. It is rumored that 20,000 Nationals have entered Versailles, but the report is considered of doubtful authenticity. The effective strength of the Communists consist of 120,000 men and 300 guns. Gen. EUDES is reported to have been wounded in the recent battles.

A Red Republican proclamation, dated at the Tuileries, strongly condemns the conduct of the Versailles Government in attacking Paris.

VERSAILLES, April 5.—M. PICARD has issued the following circular to Prefects:

"The insurgents have had a decisive check. Our troops have captured the redoubt at Chatillon with 2,000 prisoners. FLOURENS and DUVAL are dead, and HENRY is a prisoner. Twenty-two of the Communists have resigned, and M. ARRT has been imprisoned by his own followers. The Government is happy to inform you of this condition of affairs, which it has expected."

Nationals Fortifying Moulin and St. Pierre—Excitement in Paris—Insurgents at Marseilles Peacably Arrested—The Archbishop of Paris Arrested by the Commune.

LONDON, April 5.—A dispatch from Paris says the fighting continued until after 6 o'clock on the evening of the 4th. It is said the Nationals have fortified Moulin and St. Pierre. Gen. LULLIER is reported to have escaped from the custody of the Central Committee. The Paris boulevards are crowded with people and present an animated appearance. The cafés are open and the omnibuses are running, though the shops are all closed. The excitement is intense, but the city is quiet. All foreigners have hoisted the flags of their respective countries.

A dispatch from Marseilles April 5, says the insurgents in that city were mainly Garibaldians, and have nearly all been arrested.

LONDON, April 5—6 P. M.—The Archbishop of Paris has been arrested by the Commune on the charge of conspiracy against the safety of the State. At last advices from Paris the cannonading continued.

The Versailles Troops Retain Their Position—More Communal Proclamations—A Skirmish.

PARIS, April 5—11 A. M.—The Versailles troops still hold the Heights of Chatillon, whence they are bombarding Issy, Vanves and Meudon. The Commune continues to send reinforcements to the Nationals outside the walls.

Tuesday was a more disastrous day for the Communists than Monday.

The Commune this morning issued another proclamation. A speedy triumph is promised over the "Royalists" who have disgraced France by their savage mode of warfare. They are charged with shooting prisoners and murdering the wounded on the field of battle. The battalions of the National Guard will be reorganized, and their pay increased. The proclamation concludes by ordering all unmarried men into the ranks.

A grand review is announced for the 7th inst. in the Camp-de-Mars.

GENERAL EUROPEAN NEWS.

The Peace Conference—Repairing the Atlantic Cables—Telegraphic Communication with the East—The King and Queen of Sweden Recovering—Political Affairs in Spain.

LONDON, April 5.—The Peace Conference at Brussels held a session of two hours today. One of the French plenipotentiaries has gone to Versailles to consult with the Government.

The steamer Scanderia, Capt. HALPIN, late commander of the Great Eastern, leaves England early in May to repair the Anglo-American cables. With the favorable weather that may be expected after reaching the locality of the breaks, there will probably be no difficulty in effecting an immediate repair, as the faults are only in a depth of 120 fathoms.

London is now in reliable communication with Singapore, from which point the cable to Hong Kong will be laid next month, and from Hong Kong to Shanghai in June. The Singapore and Australian cable will be laid in November.

STOCKHOLM, April 5.—The King and Queen of Sweden are both recovering from their recent illness.

MADRID, April 5.—The Marquis of SANTA CRUZ has been elected President of the Spanish Cortes. The Epoca says the opposition in the Cortes numbers 140 members. The same journal intimates that Ministerial changes will probably occur at an early day. The Tempo says that Señor NOCEDAL intends to bring forward a motion for the impeachment of the members of the Cabinet.

GENERAL TELEGRAMS.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Continuation of the Revolutions—Terrible Condition of the Country—Stagnation of Business.

MONTEVIDEO, Feb. 28.—The revolution continues, and the serious results of this fratricidal war are every day becoming more apparent. The camp is in a deplorable state, for with the wholesale appropriation of all kinds of stock, oxen, sheep and horses, by both "Colorados" and "Blancos," for which the owners receive no remuneration, our Estancieros are disheartened, and many who came a few years since, with bright prospects in sheep farming are now glad to retire with the transfer of their all to their creditors. Business in the city and country towns is paralyzed, the larger part of the vessels which arrive being ordered to Buenos Ayres for a market. Sales of imports are difficult to effect, and confined only to the most requisite articles of daily consumption. The probabilities of peace and settlement of the difficulties, for which they are contending, appear more distant than ever.

The breaking out of the yellow fever in Buenos Ayres has created a stoppage of communication with the neighboring Republic. A quarantine of twelve days has been imposed upon all vessels arriving from said port, and amounts to a prohibition.

The latest news from Buenos Ayres regarding the Entre Rios revolution is favorable for the Federal Government. After the battle of Naembe in Corrientes, when LOPEZ JORDAN was defeated by BAIRNEIR, Governor of the province, the dispersed forces were pursued hotly by the Argentine Army, and large numbers of prisoners were captured, together with arms and ammunition. The commander of JORDAN'S infantry, Señor FRIERECINO, was surrendered to the Argentine forces, with a number of officers and flags. The telegram states that the war in Entre Rios can be considered finished.

Minister PARANCHO has returned from Paraguay and proceeded to Rio Janeiro. His late mission of settling the basis of a treaty between the allied Powers and Paraguay has been only partially accomplished, he having been called away rather hurriedly by the Emperor of Brazil in order to assist in the formation of a new Ministry.

CARACAS, March 28, via HAVANA, April 5.—The country is quiet. The political prisoners belonging to the fallen party have been released. Business is improving. Gen. ROJAS, who was accused of conspiracy against the Government, has been imprisoned. Gen. QUESADA, with a party of Cubans, are still in Caracas.

MEXICO.

The Re-Election of Juarez Conceded—Political Recriminations and Accusations—The Tehuantepec Canal.

CITY OF MEXICO, March 30, via HAVANA, April 5.—The charges made by the Press opposed to JUAREZ, that the United States Minister and his Secretary of Legation were interfering in the elections, proved groundless, and a mere election trick of the Lerdistas. The Nationists have accomplished nothing, and the re-election of JUAREZ is conceded. Señor ROMERO will leave the Ministry, in consequence of his unpopularity, but as he has proved a faithful adherent of JUAREZ he will be sent again as Minister to Washington, and the more readily, as it is admitted on all hands that he is the best man for the place. The Presidential canvass is attended with daily-increasing excitement, and outrages are committed by both political parties. In some of the provinces the citizens are threatened with imprisonment and violence if they do not vote with the party which happens to be dominant. The capital, however, is unusually quiet under the circumstances. Several assassinations are reported in Guadalajara, all committed on one day. The cause is as yet unascertained. The discovery of a practicable route for the Tehuantepec Canal occasions much rejoicing here.

THE WEST INDIES.

United States Vessels at St. Thomas—Defeat of Cabral in San Domingo—Excitement on the Annexation Question—Election of Delegates for the Cortes in Porto Rico.

ST. THOMAS, April 1, via HAVANA, April 5.—The United States flag-ship Congress and the school-ship Mercury are here. News has been received of the defeat of CABRAL'S army by BAEZ near Azua. It is reported that LUPERON'S army is making progress in the northern provinces. The country is anxious to see the annexation question settled.

HAVANA, April 5.—Advices from Hayti state that great excitement continues over the annexation question. Otherwise, the Republic is quiet.

HAVANA, April 5.—Advices of the 30th ult., from Porto Rico, represent that the island remains tranquil. The Conservative Party are making strenuous efforts to carry the coming elections for members of the Cortes, but their success is exceedingly doubtful. Their candidates are ESTANAN NADAL and CARLOS FAJARDO.

CRIME IN MISSISSIPPI.

Will Figures Lie?—Report by the Governor and Report Not by the Governor.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—The following dispatches were read today by Representative BARRY, of Mississippi, in the course of his speech:

JACKSON, April 2.

Hon. A. Ames, United States Senate, and Hon. G. L. Harris, J. L. Morphis, H. W. Barry, G. C. McKee, and L. W. Force, Members of the House:

GENTLEMEN: Lest the Government should be led astray by the reckless statements published in Northern newspapers, on the information of irresponsible parties, and by other misrepresentations, I feel it my duty, as Governor of this State, to bring under your knowledge the following facts:

I have before me the official returns, furnished by the auditor of public accounts, of the pauper claims, presented and allowed, in Mississippi for the last two years. For twelve months of military government, ending March, 1870, they number sixty-two; for twelve months of civil government, ending March, 1871, they number precisely the same. As on the whole year, taken, including public accounts, in the popular mind, from force to law, the civil power has been fully as successful as the bayonet in protecting life. In the last six months of each of the two years under comparison, the number of murders thus shown was as follows: Under military government, forty-one, whereas the number under civil government was but nineteen. While we thus see the military rule goes on in an increase of crime, which points to the presumption that it would lead to anarchy, we see the civil rule go on in a decrease of crime, which points to the presumption that it will lead to absolute repose. I speak for only my own State.

(Signed,) J. L. ALCORN,
Governor of Mississippi.

JACKSON, April 3.

To Hon. A. Ames, United States Senate:

The Auditor's books show fifty-four killed from March 1, 1869, to March 1, 1870, and eighty-three killed from March 1, 1870, to Feb. 28, 1871. Report of request on many known to have been killed since Jan. 1, 1871, not received by the Auditor. National troops were sent to Meridian after the riot was over.

JACKSON, April 4.

To Hon. A. Ames, United States Senate:

Auditor's books show killed last three months—January, 11; February, 14; March, 32. Auditor states at least fifteen more killed in March, not officially reported.

These two dispatches are signed by four members of the Legislature.

THE RECENT ELECTIONS.

NEW-YORK.

Republican Triumph in Tompkins County.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., April 5.—At the town meetings in Tompkins County yesterday, every town but one, Enfield, elected Republican Supervisors, making the Board eight Republicans to one Democrat. Last year it stood six Republicans to three Democrats. Ithaca elects the entire Republican ticket, except the Town Clerk, by 129 majority. This is our response to Connecticut.

CONNECTICUT.

Small Majorities Claimed for Both Jewell and English—The Election to Go to the Legislature.

EVENING POST OFFICE, HARTFORD, April 5.—Our corrected returns give ENGLISH five plurality. There are slight discrepancies in the votes of two or three towns; but giving ENGLISH the benefit of all doubts, he cannot have more than fifteen or twenty plurality, and there are scattering votes enough to overcome that and send the election to the Legislature. There is an alleged mistake of twenty-four in the count of Enfield, which, if corrected, will on our figures put JEWELL nineteen ahead. The official count alone will settle it beyond a doubt.

RHODE ISLAND.

Result of the Elections Yesterday—The Republicans Have 3,400 Majority.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., April 5.—The annual State election was held today. The present Republican State officers with the exception of Lieutenant-Governor were re-elected by about 3,400 majority.

Returns from all but one town (Block Island) give PADELFORD, Republican, 4,723; STERRS, Democrat, 3,278; scattering, 104.

The question of abolishing trap-fishing in the Bay was made an issue in the choice of the Lieutenant-Governor, and a bolt from the Republican candidate defeats the election, which now goes to the Legislature, which is largely Republican. The vote for Lieutenant-Governor stands: STEVENS, (Republican, 6,511; CUTLER, Democrat, 5,597; BRIERLY, "Hook and Line" candidate, 1,884.

The Republicans have a large majority, as usual, in each branch of the General Assembly. NATHAN F. DIXON, WM. P. SHEFFIELD and GEO. H. BROWNE, Ex-Congressmen, are returned to the Lower House.

OTHER ELECTIONS.

The Municipal Elections in Missouri—Comments of the Press.

ST. LOUIS, April 5.—Nearly accurate returns from all the precincts of the city give BROWN, (Democrat,) for Mayor, 2,053 majority. The majorities for the other candidates on the ticket range from 1,375 to 3,825. F. W. MATTHIAS, (Democrat,) for County Treasurer, probably has 3,000 majority. WILSON PRIMM, for Judge of the Criminal Court, had no competitor. Of the 12 Aldermen elected, 10 are Democrats, who, with two holding over, will make the City Council a tie. The School Board will remain Republican. The total vote is less than 20,000, out of a registration of over 26,000. The Democrat this morning attributes the defeat of the Republicans mainly to the apathy of the Germans, who largely refrained from voting, and adds: "Although there has been a defeat, it is pleasing to know that in the heat of the canvass the Republicans have become so firmly welded together as to give an earnest of success in all future contests." The Republican, commenting upon the election, says: "For this triumph we are indebted, not alone to the gallant efforts of the Democracy themselves, but substantial aid of the German population, many hundreds of whom, heretofore radical, refusing to obey the bidding of politicians, boldly stood forth in support of this recent manly course of their distinguished Senator, and thereby bestowed upon the Administration a sharp and well-merited rebuke. The Germans of St. Louis have declared with unmistakable emphasis their indorsement of Senator SCHURZ and their repudiation of the President and his policy. The moral effect of such a verdict, from such a source, cannot be overestimated. It will be recognized and appreciated throughout the country, and exercise a profound influence hereafter in more important struggles." The Times says: "For the first time in over ten years, the City of St. Louis, lately disfranchised and dishonored, elects a Democratic Mayor. The home of President GRANT repudiates, by a signal majority, the policy of his Administration. The great principles which he has abandoned and betrayed have been triumphantly vindicated in the chief city of the West. The voice of St. Louis is the voice of Missouri."

The Democrats of Sedalia, Mo., elected their entire ticket yesterday by 75 to 100 majority. The Democrats of Clinton, Mo., carried the election by three to one. The Democrats of Chillicothe carried their entire ticket. The Democratic majority in Springfield, Mo., ranged from 125 to 200. The Democrats of Warrensburg, for the first time in ten years, won a victory by electing their entire ticket.

The Elections in Minnesota.

ST. PAUL, Minn., April 3.—At the city election yesterday WILLIAM E. LEE, Democrat, was re-elected Mayor by 200 majority. The balance of the ticket was elected by about the same majority.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., April 5.—The Republicans yesterday elected E. S. AMES Mayor by about 400 majority.

The Buckhout Murder Trial at White Plains.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., April 5.—The trial of ISAAC V. BUCKHOUT, for the murder of ALFRED RENDALL, was continued today. Several witnesses testified to the sanity of the prisoner for months prior and until the day of the deed. Throughout the day the Court-room was again crowded with spectators, the majority of whom were ladies. The prisoner continues in his stoical indifference, and seems the most comfortable person in the room. At 7½ o'clock the Court adjourned until to-morrow morning, when Mr. MCKEON will sum up for the defense, and Mr. CLINTON for the people. The charge to the jury will immediately follow.

Rumored Death of Brigham Young.

CHICAGO, April 5.—A report is current of the death, at Salt Lake City, of BRIGHAM YOUNG. It cannot as yet be authenticated.

SAN DOMINGO.

The Commissioners' Report at Last Finished and Before Congress.

Explanatory Message from the President Accompanying It.

The Report a Ponderous But Interesting Document.

Many False Statements Corrected and Mysteries Cleared.

The Investigations Thorough and the Results Every Way Satisfactory.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—The San Domingo report is at last before the public, swollen from the four modest columns which comprised its proportions when the Commissioners returned here, to fully ten columns, so hastily completed this morning, which everybody will say is unfortunate, since its number of readers is reduced in proportion as its length is increased. One of the latest efforts, somewhat absurd, it will appear, was to apologize for not saying more. But Ben WADE tabooed that. In the House, the report was received at about 4½ o'clock, and, when the accompanying Message was read, Mr. DICKEY moved that it and the accompanying documents be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and Mr. HOLLEY submitted a resolution to print 25,000 copies, which was referred to the Committee on Printing. The reception of the President's Message by the Republican members of the House was very cordial indeed. People here, in and out of Congress, had been expecting the Message in consequence of the accurate foreshadowing of its character in the TIMES' dispatches of Monday, and they were agreeably surprised to find that the Message more than sustained the prediction, both in temper and in matter, while it pleased all shades of Republicans, with one or two exceptions. The Democrats received it with angry scowls, and Mr. BROOKS, of New-York, could not repress the ebullition of a spiteful remark or two, at its conclusion. The wide contrast between the temper of the Message and the temper in which the President has been assailed, is especially remarked. Some think it would have been wiser had there been no allusion, even indirect, to the disappointed men. But no one can say, under all the circumstances, that the President has not had ample justification.

THE SUBJECT IN THE SENATE.

After the Senate doors were opened at the close of the Executive Session, the report of the San Domingo Commission came in. Quite a lively scene followed. Mr. HARLAN moved that it lay on the table and be printed, but the restrictive rule which ties the hands of the Senate came up to bar this out, or at least the proposal to print. Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, then stated that he had a speech prepared which he desired should go to the country, along with the report. This speech is already printed and ready to be made up in the Globe, and printed slips have appeared in some quarters where capital against annexation is most sought. There is nothing harmful to the party or the President in it, as it is an argument against annexation on issues entirely distinct from those raised by the report, or charges like those that some desperate Senators have made. It was first decided to lay the report on the table; next, not to consider the Message at this session; and then the differences were averaged, not with a very yielding grace to be sure, and it was unanimously agreed that the Message and report should be printed, that Mr. MORRILL should have the opportunity afforded him on Friday to read his speech, and that no more speeches on the subject should be made at this session.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The following is the President's Message transmitting the report of the San Domingo Commissioners:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have the honor to submit herewith to the two Houses of Congress the report of the Commissioners appointed in pursuance of the joint resolution approved Jan. 12, 1871. It will be observed that this report more than sustains all that I heretofore said in regard to the productiveness and healthfulness of the Republic of San Domingo, of the unanimity of the people for annexation to the United States, and of their peaceable character. It is due to the public, as it certainly is to myself, that I should here give all the circumstances which first led to the accomplishment of a treaty for the annexation of the Republic of San Domingo to the United States. When I accepted the arduous and responsible position which I now hold, I did not dream of instituting any steps for the acquisition of insular possessions. I believed, however, that our institutions were broad enough to extend over the entire continents as rapidly as other peoples might desire to bring themselves under our protection. I believe, further, that we should not permit any independent Government, within the limits of North America, to pass from a condition of independence to one of owncership, or protection, under an European Power. Soon after my inauguration as President I was waited upon by an agent of President BAEZ with a proposition to annex the Republic of San Domingo to the United States. This gentleman represented the capacity of the island, the desire of the people, and their character and habits, about as they have been described by the Commissioners whose report accompanies this message. He stated further that, being weak in numbers, and poor in purse, they were not capable of developing their great resources; that the people had no incentive to industry on account of lack of protection for their accumulations; and that, if not accepted by the United States, with institutions which they loved above those of any other nation, they would be compelled to seek protection elsewhere. To these statements I made no reply, and gave no indication of what I thought of the proposition. In the course of time I was waited upon by a second agent from San Domingo, who made the same representations, and who was received in like manner. In view of the facts which had been laid before me, and with an earnest desire to maintain the Monroe doctrine, I believed that I would be derelict in my duty if I did not take measures to ascertain the exact wish of the Government, and the inhabitants of the Republic of San Domingo, in regard to annexation, and communicate the information to the people of the United States. Under the attending circumstances I felt that if I turned a deaf ear to this appeal I might, in the future, be justly charged with a flagrant neglect of the public interests, and utter disregard of the welfare of a down-trodden race praying for the blessings of a free and strong Government, and for protection in the enjoyment of the fruits of their own industry. Those opponents of annexation who have heretofore professed to be pre-eminently the friends of rights of man I believed would be my most violent assailants if I neglected so clear a duty. Accordingly, after having appointed a Commissioner to visit the island, who declined on account of sickness, I selected a second gentleman, in whose capacity, judgment and integrity I had and have yet the most unbounded confidence. He visited San Domingo not to secure or hasten annexation, but unprejudiced, and unbiassed to learn all the facts about the Government, the people and the resources of that Republic. He went certainly as well prepared to make an unfavorable report as a favorable one if the facts warranted it. His report fully corroborated the views of previous commissioners, and upon its receipt I felt that a sense of duty and a due regard for our great national interests required me to negotiate a treaty for the acquisition of the Republic of San Domingo. As soon as it became publicly known that such a treaty had been negotiated, the attention of the country was occupied with allegations calculated to prejudice the merits of the case, and with those whose duty had connected them with it. Amid the public excitement thus created, the treaty failed to receive the requisite two-thirds vote of the Senate, and was rejected. But the action of that body was based wholly upon the merits of the treaty, or might have been in some degree influenced by such unfounded allegations as could not be known by the people, because the debates of the Senate in secret session are not published. Under these circumstances I deemed it due to the office which I hold, and, the character of the agents who had been charged with the investigation, that such proceedings should be had as would enable the people to know the truth. A commission was therefore constituted under authority of Congress, consisting of gentlemen selected with special reference to their high character and capacity for the laborious work intrusted to them, who were instructed to visit the spot and report upon the facts. Other eminent citizens were requested to accompany the Commission, in order that the people might have the benefit of their views. Students of science, and correspondents of the Press, without regard to political opinions, were invited to join the expedition, and their numbers were limited only by the capacity of the vessel. The mere rejection by the Senate of a treaty negotiated by the President only indicates a difference of opinion of the Government, without touching the character or wounding the pride of either. But when such rejection takes place simultaneously with charges openly made of corruption on the part of the President or of those employed by him, the case is different, indeed, in such case, the honor of the nation demands investigation. This has been accomplished by the report of the Commissioners herewith transmitted, and which fully vindicates the purity of motives and action of those who represented the United States in the negotiation. And now my task is finished, and with it ends all personal solicitude upon the subject. My duty being done, I can retire to the quiet shade of my own vine and fig tree, and, with undivided hand over the whole matter to the judgment of the American people and their representatives in Congress assembled.

The facts will soon be spread before the country, and a decision rendered by that tribunal, whose convictions so seldom err, and against whose will it have no power whatever. My opinion remains unchanged; indeed, it is confirmed by the report, that the interests of our country and of San Domingo alike invite the annexation of the Republic. In view of the difference of opinion upon the subject, I suggest that no action be taken at the present session beyond the printing and general distribution of the report. Before the meeting of Congress the people will have considered the subject and formed an intelligent opinion concerning it, to which opinion, deliberately made up, it will be the duty of every department of the Government to give heed, and no one will more cheerfully conform to it than myself. If the act be not in the form of a Constitution that will of the people, constitutionally expressed, is the supreme law; but I have ever believed that all men are wiser than any one man; and if the people, upon a full presentation of the facts, shall decide that the annexation of the Republic is not desirable, every department of the Government ought to acquiesce in the decision.

In again submitting to Congress a subject upon which public sentiment has been divided, and which has been made the occasion of acrimonious debates in Congress, as well as unjust aspersions elsewhere, I may, I trust, be indulged in a single remark.

No man can hope to perform duties so delicate and responsible as pertain to the Presidential office, without some instances incurring the hostility of those who deem their opinions and wishes treated with insufficient consideration, and he who undertakes to conduct the affairs of a great Government as a faithful public servant, if sustained by the approval of his own conscience may rely with confidence upon the candor and intelligence of a free people, whose best interests he has strived to subserve, and can bear with patience the censure of disappointed men.

(Signed.) U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 5, 1871.

THE REPORT.

We give the substance of the report sent in by the San Domingo Commissioners to the Senate. The extreme length of the document compels us to condense many parts of it:

The following is the report of the Commission of Inquiry to San Domingo:

SIR: The Commissioners appointed pursuant to a resolution of Congress, approved July 12, 1871, to inquire into the condition of the Dominican Republic, have the honor to submit the following report, answering in a summary way the successive inquiries propounded in the resolution referring to the accompanying testimony and documents, and to the series of scientific reports for more fuller information on special subjects of inquiry. [These resolutions are here copied.]

CONDITION OF THE COUNTRY.

This country has for a long period been subjected to a series of revolts led by ambitious leaders who frequently spring up and stir the population of one or more districts into petty civil wars which sometimes ripen into revolution. In consequence of this condition of things there has grown up under various Administrations, a penal code much more severe, especially in regard to political offenses, than prevails in our country. Infested as that country has been by jealous, aspiring and seditious leaders whose importance depends on commotion, there is no doubt that a rigorous execution of this code has been necessary, from time to time, to preserve the tranquillity of the Republic. The Commissioners found the Government fully in and in complete operation in all its departments, exercising every function of legitimate government, with Gen. BUENAVENTURA BAEZ as the Chief Magistrate, in the full and peaceable possession of all parts of the Republic, except on the Haytian border, which is disturbed by insurrectionary leaders, aided by Haytians, and political refugees and emissaries who have congregated at various points on the neighboring islands. These are incited to be extraordinary active at this time by the fear of annexation to the United States. From all that the Commissioners could ascertain, President BAEZ has the respect of a great majority of the Dominicans for his administrative abilities, and the strong attachment of many of the leading men, who regard him as the only statesman among them who can hold the nation against domestic factions and foreign foes. In the year 1868, after five years of anarchy consequent upon the expulsion of the Haytian power, Gen. BAEZ was regularly elected President of the Republic. It appears that he was chosen as a man who, by his education, fortune and public services, would be most likely to secure general confidence and heal the wounds inflicted by civil and foreign wars. Five years before this he had been elected to the National Congress, and he had been made President of that body at a most critical period of the National history—the period of the creation of new institutions, after the casting off of the Haytian yoke. His first administration appears to have been successful. It stands unique in one respect, for it is the only one in the annals of the Dominican Republic which has lasted during the entire constitutional period. In 1853 he was regularly and peacably succeeded by Gen. PEDRO SANTANA. A period of anarchy soon ensued, which lasted until the year 1861, when the island was brought again under the power of Spain by Gen. SANTANA. After the expulsion of the Spaniards, anarchy again followed. During the periods before and after the Spanish domination, Gen. BAEZ was several times called in from abroad to save the country from this anarchy by provisional authority, the only authority existing under the Haytian Republic. In one of the delegations of leading citizens who tendered to him the Chief Magistracy was Gen. CABRAL. Presidents BAEZ has now entered upon the third year of his present Administration. There is ample testimony to the fact that under him, despite the difficulties that have been thrown in the Republic has enjoyed as much liberty as any of his predecessors dared allow, and more tranquillity than they knew how to give, nor do the Commissioners find that there is any opponent of the present Administration of that Republic, who has now, or who ever has had, any claim to the Chief Magistracy by a title superior to that of the present incumbent. Whatever technical defects there might have been in his original title to the office, it was confirmed by the National Convention and ratified by the assent and support of the people. The frequency of civil commotions during a long period, and the consequent insecurity of property, have paralyzed industry, discouraged accumulation, and so impoverished the country, that for the last two years the financial resources of the Government, as its officers informed us, have been inadequate to pay its expenses. Meanwhile, it has been constantly harassed with incursions and attempts at revolution. Only the ability of the Administration, and a large share of the confidence reposed in it by a strong majority of the people, could have maintained its existence through so many difficulties.

THE EXISTING INSURRECTIONS.

The insurrections which still exist are headed by CABRAL and LUPERON. The former of these is universally conceded to be the more important, but neither has a distinct flag, or a regularly-organized army. Neither is the exponent of a clearly-defined policy. Both seem animated by interest, attachments and resentments purely personal. Their opposition has assumed the character of an amazing guerrilla warfare, involving a heavy expenditure on the part of the Government at the capital, but possessing no power which gives it any hold on public opinion beyond the territory it may temporarily occupy.

As to their leaders, the Commission obtained in all parts of the country substantially the same information, viz.: That Gen. CABRAL once had the elements of personal popularity, and that in times past he earned the respect of many by public services; but that in an administrative capacity he has proved incompetent, and has lost the confidence of the country. Many even who still entertain more kindly personal feelings toward him than toward BAEZ, confess that he falls far short of the latter in administrative abilities. That Gen. CABRAL does not claim to be legal head of the Republic, that he does not claim to represent the principle of constitutional or legal authority and order, is shown by the fact that in his proclamation, and in a communication to the Commission he styles himself "Chief of the Revolution," and the learned pseudonym to emanate from him of Salvador, the "Bulletin of the Revolution." As to LUPERON the testimony both in the Cibao and on the coast is that he is simply a bandit stained with crime. He has not, so far as could be learned, distinguished himself in any regular manner, his main exploits being a series of robberies and piratical operations on the coast, the latter by means of a steamer furnished him by insurrection brokers on a neighboring island. The disturbance of which CABRAL is the head, is its seat in the western part of the Republic on the Haytian frontier. It is claimed that the districts of San Juan and Neyba, in which his operations are conducted, embrace a large population devoted to him, but the testimony of several refugees and heads of families from that district, as well as considerable corroborative evidence, shows that the region named, between the mountains of the Haytians and the prevalence of insurrection, is nearly depopulated, and that the force immediately at CABRAL'S command does not exceed a few hundred men, who, in case of emergency, force into their service all the able population upon whom they can lay their hands. It has also been claimed that he controlled the Dominican port of Barihona, and received supplies through it, but this certainly is no longer the case. On the other hand, it is charged by the present Dominican Government that he has received supplies through Hayti, and that Haytian soldiers and arms have been at his disposal. The Commissioners obtained this evidence from primary sources. They also examined Haytian prisoners, speaking only the language of the Haytians, and having in their hands muskets bearing the Haytian stamp. To the north-east of the country overrun by CABRAL, in the neighborhood of the Bay of Manzanillo, is the band under the control of LUPERON, but the opinion of trustworthy persons, taken in that section by the Commissioners, is that his force is small and of a guerrilla character. He seems to have the strength of a desperado, and nothing more. The Commissioners believe that had these leaders wielded only their own forces and resources, they would long ago have been put down. Their whole importance is derived from the help they receive from abroad, and from the fact that behind them stands the Haytian nation, which has nearly three times the population and revenue of the Dominican Republic, which has never relented in its aggressive policy, and at whose head is a President elevated by a bloody insurrection, involving the murder of his predecessor.

CAUSES OF DISTURBANCE.

Besides the revolts which have been named to the Haytian aggressions, some minor causes have, in the weakened condition of the Republic, tended to engender the disturbances. First of these may be mentioned the provincial jealousy existing between the people of the great districts north of the central chain of mountains and those inhabiting the southern side. The former district embraces the two most thriving cities of the Republic, Puerto Plata and Santiago, besides some villages of importance. On the other hand, to the south side belongs the City of San Domingo, with its prestige as the capital city—decayed, but still powerful, from its vital connection with the history of the island from COLUMBUS to BAEZ. In a weakened state of the Republic, the jealousy between these districts has caused revolutionary leaders to arise; but with a Government strong and free, giving better internal communications and developing industry, this provincial jealousy would probably be changed into a healthy political rivalry. Next, a more serious cause of disturbance, the steady exercise of political rights, lies in the existence of a considerable number of petty military chiefs, about whom has grown up a peculiar system of clientship or semi-military attachment. This prevails especially in the central and mountainous districts, and is the natural result of long-continued struggles between ambitious men for supremacy in the Republic. In the anarchy thus caused, each neighborhood has shown a tendency to group itself about its most daring or capable men. These have received military titles from the heads of various governments or revolutionists, the rank of each depending mainly on the number of retainers he could bring to the leader whose cause he had espoused. The attachment thus begun in war, continues in peace, and as political institutions are weak, often becomes stronger than law or political habits; hence arises a class whose importance depends on commotion. Uncommitted and therefore uneasy, they are prompt to increase any troubles that may arise. The people of the country clearly understand that these disturbers of their peace are public enemies. Among the reasons constantly assigned for desiring annexation to the United States was the necessity of extinguishing the lawlessness and mischievous arming from this system. To these causes of disturbance may be added a third, very effective at present, but which would be at once annihilated should the Dominican Republic be effectually protected by connection with a stronger nation. Within short distances of San Domingo are various other islands where insurrectionists and destructives freely hatch their plots. To such an extent has this been carried, that certain capitalists there invest in prominent revolutionists as a matter of business. Revolution becomes thus a branch of trade, in which capitalists embark with certainty of great gains, but with possibility of great pains. To further these operations, proclamations and documents are forged. These emanate nominally from the leaders of the insurrectionary force of the day, but they generally present the clearest internal evidence that their pretended authors never saw them. From these parties and their agents come rumors and even circumstantial accounts of insurrections where none exists. The Commissioners encountered several instances of this. This insurrection broker-age would doubtless cease as soon as it is the policy of any strong nation to prevent it.

LOCAL LIBERTIES.

In all the struggles of various administrations against revolutionists and destructives, the local and municipal liberties of the provinces, districts and towns have suffered greatly. Still the germs of local liberty are by no means wholly destroyed. "Ayuntamientos" or Town Councils, are still retained. These are bodies elected by the people, holding regular sessions, keeping records of their proceedings, and exercising considerable care in the registration of vital statistics. To these bodies belongs the local administration. They are small, and the length of the term of office prevents in some degree, the immediate influence of the popular will being felt upon them; still they serve at least to keep up the traditions of local freedom and some habit of local management of affairs. The men chosen seem worthy of their trust. The Commissioners were impressed with the general character and ability of the members of their municipal bodies. There are among them many who would do honor to similar councils in any country. The difficulties and dangers with which these men have been environed seems to have developed and strengthened their characters, while interest in political affairs has been by the same circumstances nearly crushed out of the more public spirits. It was among this class that the Commission and their agents found their most intelligent welcome, and unrestrained conversation with them showed that their welcome was not a mere formality to which they had been compelled. It appears to the Commissioners, that under the Government guaranteeing liberty and order, these municipal bodies scattered through the country might become centres of a better system than the Dominican Republic has yet known.

DESIRE FOR ANNEXATION.

Although bitterly disappointed in the result of the Spanish annexation, the people, who were soon involved in new revolutions, come now to look ahead to the hope of relief. To the surprise of the Commission, in almost all parts of the country, even the remotest, the people were found to be familiar with the question of annexation to the United States, and to have discussed it among themselves with intelligence. All classes, all parts of the Republic were consulted; magistrates and ecclesiastics of every grade, official, civil and military, citizens of all professions and occupations in town and country, and everywhere there was a general agreement in the declaration that their only hope of permanent peace and prosperity is in annexation, and becoming part of the people of the United States. They generally declared their belief that the strong arm of this Republic taking them under protection as part of the nation, would at once end the efforts and hopes of every seditious revolutionary leader, and establish law, order and prosperity.

AMERICAN COLONIES.

The incorporation into public sentiment of a feeling strongly favorable to annexation to the United States in preference to any other Power, is partially due to the presence in various parts of the country of small colonies of colored people, formerly from the United States. These persons or their immediate ancestors generally came to the country in the time of President BOYER. Their love of the country of their birth seems to have deepened with time, and they all look upon American institutions as the only means of rescuing the country from anarchy and insecurity. Very touching expressions of this were the Commissioners at various points. These people live on the best of terms with their neighbors, speaking the language of the country and conforming in general to its customs, and they have formed in a greater or less degree centres from which respect for the United States has gone forth.

THE POPULAR DISPOSITION.

When asked if they would not prefer to remain an independent nation, the people generally answered that they would be glad to preserve their independence if it were possible, but since experience had shown them that the nation could not sustain itself, they were compelled to look abroad for support, and if they must sink their nationality, they preferred the American Union, with free institutions, and a friendly people, and common interests. They seem to me to be more nearly unanimous in this than we have ever before known in a people to be upon any political question which they were called on to consider. It was only by diligent search that the exceedingly small proportion who opposed annexation could be found at all. The principal part of the opposition which does exist appears to be among certain traders in the ports, some of whom, in case of a change, would find their profits of branches of business, of which, in its present narrow channels, they have a monopoly. Others are sal agents of houses abroad, and in the event of these branch establishments being withdrawn, would be supplanted. To these should be added certain agents of bankers in neighboring islands, who have made pecuniary profit out of the revolutions, though these would, without doubt, favor annexation, if it were consummated under the direction of those whom they support. Beside these a small number scattered in various parts of the country oppose annexation, for reasons peculiarly to themselves, some from a misunderstanding of the terms, some few from a liking for the turmoil which the present condition of things permits; some from opposition to the present Administration. The reports and rumors that there are parties in various sections of the country ready to resort to desperate measures against annexation seem to be disproved by the following simple facts in the history of the Commission:

ARRIVAL OF THE CUNARD STEAM-SHIP RUSSIA.

THE GERMAN EMPIRE.

The Result of the Recent Elections—A New First Chamber—The Government and Abuses and Scandals—Question of Territory to Bavaria—Future Parliamentary Business—An Address to the King—A "Holy Alliance"—Bismarck in Disgrace.

From Our Own Correspondent.

BERLIN, Tuesday, March 21, 1871.

I regret my inability to supply complete information concerning the composition of the Chamber; many of the second elections are still undecided, and of the 382 members that should be, only about 240 are returned; not even all those are in Berlin. On the whole the elections have resulted in a Conservative victory, though not as decisive as had been expected by Government. The returns show some remarkable results, establishing the superiority of Prussian electoral training. On the whole, South Germany and even the new Prussian Northern States, have returned a Liberal majority, even Mecklenburg, the sanctuarium of aristocracy, has elected exclusively Liberal members, but Prussia, true to its traditions, has kept the balance inclined toward the Conservative side. Berlin, indeed, makes a marked exception, having voted Liberal, and defeated the victorious Generals, whom popularity Government had hoped would extract a favorable vote from the unmanageable capital. The famous strategists have suffered a signal defeat in their fatherland, a lesson that Government ought to take to heart, to learn that militarism, though a splendid weapon against France will not do in civil administration. VOGHT VON FALCKENSTEIN, indeed, just the most unpopular of the number, has been barely got into Parliament, but that was because he was not proposed in Berlin, but in a provincial district, where Government influence and jobbery-mandering are more effective.

PROSPECTS OF THE SESSION.

On the whole the new Parliament will prove a very compliant one. There is no great show of opposition among the National Liberals, who have, if anything, of late made a nearer approach to their old friends, the Liberal Conservatives. The session will probably not extend beyond SIX WEEKS; at least it is said that the business proposed should not take any longer. But, to say the truth, this supposition appears to be founded more upon the knowledge of Count BISMARCK'S intention to proceed on an early day to his country seat, at Varzin, than on any cognition of measures to be proposed. With regard to these, Government has preserved its extraordinary reticence, not even the semi-official papers giving more than very slight hints as to the Ministerial plans. His Majesty's speech to-day will break the silence, with the additional charm of surprise. Number one among the proceedings will, of course, be the ratification of the treaties, recognition of the Empire, and all that belongs to the first foundation of the general constitution. Any controversy anticipated on the subject will turn on the rights reserved by some of the local Governments, but the debate will be probably cut short by the Ministry, time being precious and the subject an invidious one.

A NEW FIRST CHAMBER.

Other matters connected with the Constitution will be delayed until Autumn, only it is suspected that Government will propose the institution of a First Chamber, composed of Sovereigns, mediatized Princes, representatives of the nobility and delegates from towns and provinces, selected item among the chief officers. The official Press has lately discussed the project in extenso, and especially the Cross Gazette, the champion of Prussian conservatism, has loudly clamored for and insisted upon the constitution of such a chamber. The project finds no favor at all with the people. Prussian experience with regard to their own First Chamber has produced a dread of similar evil consequences. The Prussian First Chamber has been a bane to the country, obstructing its progress at every step, and the German First Chamber would act not far differently. Besides, it would become the stronghold of Prussian "junkerdom," the Prussian party, overruling all other elements, and that is what our enlightened Germans wish to avoid. Indeed, there are ingredients enough imposed already by the absolute power of the crown, but the interposition of a conservative chamber would increase the difficulty tenfold, and the people would, of two evils, far sooner allow the Emperor and local sovereigns additional prerogatives, than submit to the imposition of this new incubus. Germans are conservative in many respects, but they cannot brook feudal "junkerdom;" the Assembly of Deputies is conservative enough anyhow.

ALSACE AND LORRAINE.

The next subject to legislate upon will be the future government of Alsace and Lorraine, and the position they are to occupy in the Empire. It is believed that, though nothing is positively known, Government has long made up its mind on this question, and that its plans are greatly at variance with those of public opinion. The Germans are easily ruled by ideas, and though the one here referred to appears a most impractical one, still it does sway the public mind, and has for the time got a firm hold of it. This idea is that Alsace and Lorraine, conquered by the united efforts of the Empire, should be its common property, a memorial of its unification, and a common prize of the war. This proposal meets with no favor from above, and probably on the ground of practical objections. It was proposed to constitute the added territory an independent State, sharing with its fellow States only common exchequer to the Imperial Crown. But this would, in the first place, only aggravate the evil of division already dangerously preponderant in the Empire, and which the Empire was resorted to to abolish; the selection of a Prince might also have proved a thorny question. In the second place, it does not realize the idea of subjection to the common fatherland. The next proposal was to place the provinces under the sovereignty of the Federal Council and Assembly representing the united Governments of the confederation. And, lastly, it was suggested that the Emperor should unite the sovereignty over the new provinces with that over his old kingdom, without, however, the two being amalgamated into one State. Both plans—if the latter were preserved in its intended purity—would produce this evil consequence, that the new provinces would stand in the Empire as an inferior, subjugated race, the old Germans would practically ride over the new, the German Parliament would hold the sovereign power over them, as the British Parliament, for instance, did in former times over the colonies. This would make the Government of the unwilling Alsatians and Lotheringians far more burdensome than it must be anyhow. The third project is perhaps the most practicable, but the personal union would gradually, and probably advisedly, degenerate into a real union; if it did not, a desertion of one race over the other, viz., of the Prussians over the Alsatians, must follow. Governments has not declared in favor of either of these proposals, but has tentatively held out each of the three in turn by the aid of friendly journals.

CESSION OF TERRITORY TO BAVARIA.

Great indignation was aroused by the announcement that Wissembourg, Lauterburg and the adjoining country, with some hundred thousand inhabitants, are to be joined to Bavaria, yet the cession appears to be an accomplished fact. Government first broached the subject by some articles in the Allgemeine Zeitung; but the discussion was allowed to drop, in consequence of the unfavorable reception it met with by the public. Since about a week Count BISMARCK'S organ, the North German Gazette, not only advocates the arrangement, but rebuts beforehand such attacks as it imagines public opinion will assail it with. Its predictory faculty is justified by the result, for all Liberal papers hasten to the charge, though they confess their efforts to be too late. When the North German Gazette commences a thing, it belongs no more to the future, but to the past. It can hardly be doubted that a promise was made to Bavaria at the outbreak of the war, either to insure or to reward its patriotic participation in the common task, and say the Prussians what they will of the Bavarians, in turn of their Ultramontane proclivities, and of their practical liberal aspirations, the gentlemen at Munich have a very just estimate of property and power, territorial aggrandisement or the reservation of national prerogatives, and watch vigilantly over their private interests. This Wissembourg business has brought the Bavarians a little bit into disgrace with their Northern brethren. The ostensible reasons for the cession are that Bavaria ceded to Prussia in 1816 over two hundred square miles, with 92,000 inhabitants; that Wissembourg has at a former time been under Bavarian rule; that the class of land will fit admirably into the Bavarian territory, &c. All these reasons are easily refuted. If Bavaria ceded a small district to Prussia in 1816, other States ceded far more. Wissembourg belonged formerly to the Palatinate and not to Bavaria, though the two are now joined; and if it fits into the Bavarian Kingdom, it does as much well into two Grand Duchy of Baden. It is evident that at the outbreak of the war Count BISMARCK was not so sure of the South Germans as he later pretended to have been, and that with that excellent foresight and diplomatic management which grants freely what is not its own, and of which every new disclosure of secret treasure furnishes fresh proof, has purchased the loyal assistance of the South by concessions to its chief power, Bavaria.

FUTURE PARLIAMENTARY BUSINESS.

Beyond the subjects already touched upon, none of importance are officially held out to Parliament, though party papers recommend a list of proposals to its consideration, whose name is legion. The liberal journals especially insist upon measures to be taken to insure the liberty of the Press, which YOUR readers may be aware is now very far from free. From Hanover there comes a cry for abrogation of the "state of war" by act of Parliament; disgraceful though it is, the "state of war" still continues in the entire north of Germany. As M. VOGHT VON FALCKENSTEIN has been returned to Parliament, members will have an opportunity of questioning him for his reasons, but he will presumably again hide behind the broad Ægis of the Crown. Some financial measures are sure to be brought before the Assembly, though they will naturally be confined to the most urgent only. The loans granted to the Empire by the Prussian Diet will have to be paid, and the Government must be voted money to go on with. Skeptical Liberals suspect Count BISMARCK of the intention of pressing his so-called "iron," i. e., permanent, army budget. Unless overruled by Government, a number of Deputies propose to inquire into election abuses, to show up authorities for misapplying their power.

THE ADDRESS TO THE KING.

Under all circumstances the debate and the address will be far more comprehensive than it has ever been before. All parties agree in the desire to make it a means of conveying their loyal gratitude and allegiance to His Majesty, at the present moment above all, when he has, for the first time, reunited the numerous tribes of the fatherland to one family. But there the unanimity ends. Strong in the consciousness that by their union and sacrifices not less than by the tactics of their leaders, they have contributed to the victory, and have therefore a right to claim, the liberal representatives of the people wish to advanced wards for liberal concessions, which Government would never strike His Majesty as acceptable, but if rumor speaks true, they will jar on his own plans just at present with particular disharmony.

A "HOLY ALLIANCE."

The Emperor, in the recollections of olden days, which he confesses to in his letter to the Czar, is said to desire to follow up the second victory over France by similar measures as were adopt, fifty-six years ago, after the first, and to revive the "holy alliance" between the potentates (now all Emperors) of Russia, Prussia and Austria, an alliance that I hope I may not insult your readers by explaining, was directed far more against internal enemies, the Press, demagogues and liberal aspirations than against foreign foes. That policy may have answered very well fifty-six years ago, until it was upset by the tide of revolution nothing is from France, but the population now considers itself too far advanced in political independence for a resurrection to it. Gossip has developed the tale into a perfect scandal, which I repeat without any further comment than that it comes from otherwise good authority, but it is not generally, or at least not professedly, credited in Berlin, though every one speaks of it.]

BISMARCK IN DISGRACE.

The almighty Emperor-maker, Count BISMARCK, is reported to have fallen into disgrace, or something very like it, with his master. It was observed that he arrived not only before the Emperor, but perfectly unexpectedly, as if he himself had only made up his mind at the last moment. Still, that might be explained; but on his arrival in Berlin, the capital of strict etiquette and unswerving Court rule, his Excellency was taken no notice of by the Empress for three or four days, and only when summoned to an audience, which, by rights, he should have been on the very first day. The story worked up out of these materials is this: Count MOLTKE and Gen. VON ROON were dissatisfied with Count BISMARCK'S terms of peace; they took several exceptions to them, and were especially indignant at being cheated out of their triumphal entry into Paris. A signal opportunity offered of the reconciliation appealed to the Emperor; the Emperor sided with the discontented Generals. The Chancellor, in a huff, ordered his special train, and posted off to Berlin suddenly and unexpectedly. There he sulks now, and will sulk for some months to come at Vargin, until his master again learns to value his services and restores him to his ancient place of favor. The reconciliation will be facilitated by both his adversaries quitting the field, both contemplating their resignation of office. Both are old, and have had hard work to do during the last decennium. Gen. VON ROON began his career without a farthing, and earned what he wanted, besides his pay, by lessons or literary work, or something of that kind. All that he wished to acquire before his retirement into private life was a small country house, with a garden attached to it. 1866 brought him a handsome estate, and 1871 will bring him still greater wealth. Both officers will have a great deal of work to do still before they can retire—work connected with the late war—but their intention to retire is considered certain. Gen. VON PODBIELSKI is named as Gen. VON ROON'S successor in the War Office.

LACK OF LAURELS.

There is scarcity of an article for which there is now an excessive demand. After gaining so many laurels in France, one would hardly think it credible that the Prussians should be hard up for them at home. They are though. Wreaths, garlands and other decorations are making everywhere, but there is nothing left to make them with. Jewelers are carving and chiseling, moulding and polishing away at gold and silver laurels, and the stock of figurative ones is abundant, but the natural plant is not to be got. In this dilemma the Berlin gardeners have applied to their colleagues in neutral Belgium, and offered handsome prices for a supply. But the Belgians have refused the implored assistance, on the ground of the pro-French sympathies of their countrymen, which would not allow them to contribute to the show of German triumph.

EARTHQUAKES IN ENGLAND.

Shocks in Wales, and General Alarm—Lightning and Wind the Accompaniment in Lancashire.

The Liverpool Mercury says that a severe shock of earthquake was felt at Llandudno at 11:05 o'clock on Wednesday night, March 29. The ground trembled, houses shook, and windows clattered. The effects were also felt at Conway by the correspondent. The report resembles the firing of artillery, and caused many people to rise from their beds and look toward the sea, thinking some ship was in distress, and was firing for help. First came two reports, followed by four reports; then two reports, and lastly one report, with a few minutes' interval between each. After this there was quiet for about 2 o'clock yesterday morning, when some persons heard more reports. The sea and atmosphere were perfectly calm and quiet. The horizon was dark, with a faint haze from the stars. The shock was preceded by a hissing sound similar to that of a rocket, and which appeared to come from the Ormshead, and was accompanied by flash of light. A correspondent telegraphing from Colwyn, says: "Three heavy shocks of earthquake, at intervals of a few minutes, accompanied by deep, heavy sounds, and much shaking of doors, windows and furniture, were felt here about 11 o'clock on Wednesday night. Great excitement prevailed, people jumping out of their beds and rushing out of doors. A lady, in the absence of her husband, much alarmed by the noise, went in great excitement for a police officer. It was felt at Abergele."...The London Daily News says: "On Wednesday night, from 10½ till 11½ o'clock, a strange rumbling noise, accompanied by a slightly oscillating motion, was heard in several parts of north and west Lancashire. The sensation experienced was akin to that felt last Friday night, but it was not so intense nor so generally recognized, though it was much more marked in effect. At Preston some parties heard deep, heavy sounds, and felt a slow, wave-like motion of the earth. The shocks felt on the 24th were repeated nearly at the same hour (quarter of 11) here, and quite distinct enough to scare and alarm several persons. There were also observed pale flashes of lightning, which were succeeded by dull, slow reverberations, as if proceeding from distant thunder-claps. The wind changed about twenty times—shifting rapidly in all directions—during the period named; and occasionally drops of rain fell. The northern sky was clear and starry, while the firmament in the opposite direction was dull and cloudy. In the Fylde of Lancashire, a heavy, booming sound, accompanied by partial oscillation of the earth, was noticed on Wednesday night. One person who observed says: 'The sound seemed to come from a number of guns of a distance—as if they were being fired rapidly; and we thought it was produced by some shooting party until we bethought ourselves of the hour—11 o'clock at night—which dispelled that notion.' There was a tremulousness of the earth observed, but neither the precise nature of the concussion nor the atmospheric commotion could be accurately defined."

ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The English Government and the Civil War.

In the House of Lords, on March 31, the following remarks were made concerning the attitude of the Government during the strife in the United States:

Lord HOUGHTON said that, notwithstanding the great events which had occurred since the American war, there was hardly any decision of the British Government which had more historical importance than the determination, in the crisis of the American rebellion, not to recognize the Southern Confederacy. He had no doubt that that decision came to on grounds of large policy, a policy broad enough to overcome all personal opinions and prejudices; but it was probably, indeed almost certain, that it was not arrived at without weighing the position of the question in the minds of other European Governments. He believed it was admitted that one great European Power was decidedly in favor of recognition, and that the British Government was influenced by this opinion and desire of that Power. Now, a rumor had lately been spread in that great country on the other side of the Atlantic, with which we were at present engaged in such interesting negotiations, to the effect that the British Government was fully inclined to recognize the South, and was diverted from that purpose by the intervention of a friendly power, option of another great Power, which assumed, perhaps somewhat ostentatiously, to be the chief friend of America in Europe. That rumor has been widely spread in the United States, and the name of a distinguished diplomatist, the Russian Minister at Washington, had been mixed up with the story, by having, it was alleged, conveyed to that Minister the intelligence. He had given his noble friend (Earl GRANVILLE) sufficient notice of his question to enable him to refer to contemporary documents at the Foreign Office, so as fully to inform himself whether there was any intervention by the Russian Government to influence the decision of the British Cabinet. If such an opinion extended itself it might seriously injure suspending negotiations with the United States. It was important that that country should understand the real motive of our conduct during its great struggle, and that it should do justice to the course taken by the British Cabinet of that time with regard to its interests. He would ask his noble friend whether the story of the Russian Minister had made such a statement was correct, and if not, whether he could throw any light on the matter.

Earl GRANVILLE—The rumor to which my noble friend has alluded has certainly reached me, but I trust, like many other rumors, it is unfounded, for any such statement would be founded on a complete misunderstanding of the facts. As to the facts, I can speak with authority, for I had the honor of being a member of Lord PALMERSTON'S Cabinet, and I have communicated not only with Mr. GLADSTONE and Mr. CARDWELL, who were also members of it, but with Lord RUSSELL and I am speaking in the presence of the Lord Privy Seal (Viscount HALIFAX) and the noble Duke behind me (SOMERSET) who are also cognizant of the facts. There is no record in the Foreign Office of any influence having been used in this matter by the Russian Government, and, moreover, it was not required, as no proposal was ever entertained by Lord PALMERSTON'S Cabinet for the recognition of the Confederate States.

The Duke of SOMERSET—As a member of Lord PALMERSTON'S Cabinet, I can perfectly confirm the statement of my noble friend. Before the time at the Admiralty, and therefore at the head of the navy, any such proposal as this would have attracted my serious attention at the time, and I could not possibly have forgotten it. I am certain that no such proposal was ever made.

GERMANY.

Sentiment in Frankfort—A Significant Election.

By a private letter we have received information of the election to the German Parliament of Mr. LEOPOLD SONNEMANN, editor and proprietor of the Frankfort Gazette, widely known as one of the most influential political and financial papers in Germany. Mr. SONNEMANN will represent his native city, Frankfort-on-the-Main. The significance of his election lies in the fact that he is a liberal in sentiment, and one of the most prominent leaders of the German Democratic Party. His opponent in the election was one of the Barons ROTHSCHILD; but neither the wealth nor influence of this money-king availed against the popularity of Herr SONNEMANN.

THE EX-EMPIRE.

Arrest and Attempted Assassination of M. Rouher.

M. ROUHER was arrested at Boulogne on March 31, at the Hotel Bristol, by M. MORICAULT, Commissary of Police, acting in virtue of instructions he had received from the Government at Versailles. After having been interrogated, M. ROUHER was allowed to return on parole to the hotel; but on his way his carriage was attacked and upset by an infuriated crowd, among whom were many fishermen, who nearly tore all the hair off his head. With difficulty he was rescued by the authorities, and conducted to the Palais de Justice for safety. Mme. and Mlle. ROUHER are under arrest at the hotel. It is reported, says the Boulogne correspondent of the Telegraph, that DE FAILLY, CONTI LA VALETTE, and other partisans of the fallen régime, are in this town; but their presence having been signalized, their arrest may also be expected to follow. No compromising papers were found on the Ex-President of the Senate.

FOREIGN DEATH RECORD.

Prof. Gervinus—Mr. W. Bennett, Artist—Bennzoni, Sculptor—Leonard Chodzko, Polish Patriot—Victims of Bicêtre Paris.

The German papers announce the death at Heidelberg of Prof. GEORGE GOTTFRIED GERVINUS, the historian, at the age of sixty-six. GERVINUS was at first devoted to commercial pursuits, but in 1835 he became Professor of History at Göttingen. In 1837 he, with six other Professors, resisted the violation of the Hanoverian Constitution by the King, ERNST AUGUST, (the Duke of Cumberland,) and in consequence was compelled to leave Hanoverian territory. He took refuge in Italy, and it was not until 1844 that he became Professor of History at Heidelberg and began to take an active part in politics. He was one of the Commission intrusted with the preparation of the draft of the Constitution of 1849, by which the Imperial crown of Germany was offered to the then King of Prussia. When the reaction set in, GERVINUS was among those marked out for vengeance, and in 1853 he was tried for high treason on account of the sentiments expressed in his Introduction to the History of Europe, the work by which, in its translated form, he is best known in England; he was sentenced to four months' imprisonment. In more recent times GERVINUS took the unpopular side, and could not reconcile himself to the course which events took in 1866, or to the results of the recent war. He was in his fifty-second year....Among the victims of the disturbance in the Place Vendôme, in Paris, was Mr. GEORGE HANNAH TENNIL, stated to be an American. M. John Alstyne's Will—A Doubtful Charitable Bequest.

A case came up yesterday before Judge SPENCER, in the Superior Court, Special Term, involving an interpretation of the will of the late JOHN ALSTYNE, and is entitled, St. Luke's Home for Indigent Christian Females, against Wm. C. WETMORE et al. The defendant, WILLIAM C. WETMORE, is appears, is the executor of the late JOHN ALSTYNE, who died in the year 1868, leaving a large estate, amounting, it is said, to several millions of dollars. In his will Mr. ALSTYNE made bequests to various charitable institutions, including $25,000 to "The Society for the Relief of Indigent Aged Females." The defendants, whose corporate name is "An Association for the Relief of Respectable Aged Females in the City of New-York," claim that this bequest was intended for them, while plaintiffs claim it was intended for them. The testimony given in the case on the part of plaintiffs was to the effect that Mr. ALSTYNE was an Episcopalian; that he had given $25 to plaintiffs in his life time; that just before his death he consulted with the Vice-President of St. Luke's Home about leaving a bequest to the Society, and said he intended to do so. On behalf of defendants it was claimed that their corporate name more nearly resembles the name in the will than does the plaintiffs; that [illegible] for the bequest were left [illegible] who drew the will, the [illegible] "The Old Ladies' Society," [illegible] were generally known by [illegible] under Episcopal [illegible] and directors, while defendants [illegible] Home; and it is claimed on the part of the latter that testimony [illegible] had left several legacies to other non-sectarian institutions, it appears most probable that they were intended for the latter.

Judge SPENCER reserved his decision. Mr. HAMILTON MAHON for plaintiffs; EDWARD E. MARSH for defendants.

BOARD OF HEALTH.

The Carbolic Acid Poisoning Case—Vital Statistics—The Small-Fox in Quarantine—Other Contagious Diseases.

At the meeting of the Board of Health, yesterday, the City Sanitary Inspector reported that he had fully investigated the circumstances connected with the death of Mrs. BRIDGET MAY, of No. 28 New Chambers-street, who was poisoned by swallowing in mistake for brandy some carbolic acid left with her for disinfecting purposes, by Inspector VON BULOW, of the Board of Health. VON BULOW had complied with all the requirements of the Board. A circular printed in German and English, giving full directions for the use of the acid, had been left with it. Since this time, however, the bottles containing the carbolic acid were labeled "Poison."

The following report relative to deaths in this City was read:

BOARD OF VITAL STATISTICS, April 5, 1871.

To the Secretary of the Board of Health:

I have the honor to report for deaths for the past week, being an increase of 10 over the previous week. There were 24 fatal cases of small-pox, an increase of 6; 6 of measles, a decrease of 5; and 18 of scarlatina, a decrease of 5. Typhus fever was credited with 1 death, and typhoid with 3, against 0 and 2, severally, in the preceding week. The mortality from phthisis pulmonalis, which for two weeks had declined very considerably, rose during the past week to 301. Pneumonia and bronchitis together also increased from 76 to 88. Bright's disease produced the large weekly mortality of 37—exceeding fifty per cent over the previous week. In the quarter just ended the whole recorded deaths have amounted to 8,564, a slight excess over the corresponding period of 1870, during which 8,7[illegible] deaths were recorded. The prevailing epidemics have been scarlatina and small-pox. To the first there have been referred 501 deaths, exactly the same number as in the first quarter of the past year; and 1,[illegible] deaths resulted from measles against 38 in the Winter quarter of 1870. Scarlatina although wide-spread, has not been very fatal, its malignant type notwithstanding, as only 375 deaths have been recorded against 1,[illegible] in 1870. Small-pox and typhoid and typhus fever have been unusually fatal, 1[illegible] and 49 deaths respectively having been ascribed to them—their lowest quarterly mortality in ten years. Relapsing fever has carried off but 1 person during the three months. The mortality from phthisis pulmonalis, the leading disease, has been stationary, it having operated[illegible] deaths—or eighteen per cent of the total—being an excess of 20 deaths over the mortality of the first quarter of 1870. A late sanitary statement from Dr. JULES WORMS, Inspector of the Medical Service in Paris, shows a mortality which, although in abatement, is still at the annual rate of sixty-eight in the thousand among the over 1,[illegible] of that City. The figures of the last week could illustrate the sufferings of its people so forcibly as do these hard figures. During its memorable siege the splendid capital of France experienced a mortality that probably has never prevailed in any other European city within the present century.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. F. RUSSELL, M. D.,

Registrar of Records.

Health Officer CARNOCHAN said delay had taken place on vessels arriving at this port are of one of contagious character. The steamers Wisconsin and Russia are now at Quarantine with cases on board. Within the past month thirty-seven cases have been sent from Quarantine to the West Bank Hospital, and of them four have died.

Gen. PALMER, late United States Appraiser, sent a communication complaining of the condition of Trinity-place, garbage and refuse being scattered about, and no effort being made to remove the same. Commissioner MAHERE moved that a copy be sent to Senator Conkling, who seemed to possess the power of removal and appointment, and the motion was carried. The matter was referred to the Street-cleaning Committee.

The following is City Sanitary Inspector MOHNS' weekly report of contagious diseases:

I have the honor to submit the following comparative statement of contagious diseases reported to this Bureau for the two weeks ending April 1, 1871:

[illegible] ending March 18, 1871, 1[illegible] typhoid fever, 13; relapsing fever, 1; scarlet fever, 78; small-pox, 18; measles, 81; diphtheria, 12.

Week ending April 1—Typhoid fever, 15; relapsing fever, 3; scarlet fever, 79; small-pox, 24; measles, 42; diphtheria, 18.

The Assistant Health Inspectors have visited 2,[illegible] families in their own houses, and vaccinated 2,077 persons therein, during the past week. They have also vaccinated 1,[illegible] children in the public and parochial schools, making a total of vaccinations performed during the week of 3,[illegible]. Eight hundred and eighty-eight of these were primary and 2,[illegible] secondary vaccinations.

The Board then adjourned.

Rumored Arrest of Fisk and Gould.

A rumor prevailed in the United States Courts yesterday that a warrant had been issued for the arrest of JAMES FISK, Jr., and JAY GOULD, for resisting the Deputy Marshals in the service of an injunction issued against them by Judge BLATCHFORD restraining them from issuing any new stock of the Erie Railroad Company. Upon making inquiries of the different Commissioners in the building, however, it was ascertained that there was no foundation for the story in fact, though the circumstances attending the service of the injunction on Fisk and Gould—the one ordering the expulsion of the marshals, and the other denying his own presence—exclusively published in the TIMES, were not only correct, but did not do justice to the violent passion with which the deputies' action inspired Mr. FISK on the occasion.

The Weehawken Tragedy—Verdict of the Jury.

Yesterday forenoon PATRICK CUNNINGHAM, who stands charged with the murder of ANTHONY McDONOUGH, at Weehawken, was escorted from the County Jail by two officers to Hoboken, in order to be present at the inquest over the remains of his victim. He was untramelled by handcuffs and allowed great freedom, which he seemed in no way desirous to take advantage of. CUNNINGHAM is nearly six feet in height, of muscular build and gross proportions. His face wore a wondrously immobile expression, but the sight of his sorrowing wife and innocent little children touched his feelings perceptably, and he dropped a few reluctant tears as he lifted one of the young ones in his arms. Testimony was taken to the effect that the murder as already published, and a verdict was rendered that the deceased had "died of injuries received at the hands of PATRICK CUNNINGHAM."

At the termination of the proceedings, CUNNINGHAM was surrounded by a crowd of friends and sympathizers, who almost forced him with his custodians to the bar, where all hands "drowned dull care" in the oblivious cup. Under the stimulants the prisoner brightened up somewhat, but throughout maintained the same passive look. He parted from his friends with a silent but forcible grasp of the hand, and returned to his cell in the custody of two officers. The report in a morning paper that threats of lynching were uttered at Weehawken, are entirely unfounded. Whatever rabble was there was rather more likely, in the Coroner's opinion, to attempt his rescue than his life.

The Carey Homicide—Coroner's Inquest.

Coroner KEENAN yesterday commenced an investigation into the cause of the death of JOHN CAREY, who died recently from the effects of injuries inflicted on the evening of March 17, in Bethune-street. The witnesses that were produced appeared to give their evidence very reluctantly, and in the end knew nothing of the fight during which CAREY had been so badly injured.

JOHN O'CONNOR, of No. 277 West Twelfth-street, was standing at the corner of Bethune and Washington streets, and saw a fight about thirty feet off; but, although he went toward the party, now the deceased and the prisoners, CHARLES COLLINS and JOHN MCGOVERN, he could

From said examination it appears that the cash assets of said Company amount to the sum of $[illegible], as in liabilities, exclusive of capital stock, $[illegible]; capital stock, $250,000; aggregate liabilities, $[illegible]; leaving a surplus of capital, $[illegible], or an increase of capital, $[illegible].

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

No. 129.—United States vs. John N. Anderson et al.—Error to the Circuit Court for the District of Iowa.—This is an information to enforce a forfeiture under the Internal Revenue laws, against 300 caddies of tobacco, of which the defendants in error are claimants. The plea was that the proceedings to enforce the forfeiture within twenty days after seizure, were provided for by the act. This objection was sustained, and the judgment was for the claimants. The Government maintains here that the twenty days' proviso relied on has been repealed by subsequent statutes, in this manner: Section 3 of the statute requiring proceedings to be commenced within twenty days after the seizure, also provides "that all proceedings relating to forfeitures and sale of distilled spirits shall apply to tobacco, snuff and cigars; and as new provisions have been enacted in respect to the illegal manufacture of distilled spirits, and the punishment thereof covering entirely the same ground of the statute in question, and without limitation in regard to the time in which the proceedings for forfeiture shall be commenced, it is contended that that limitation as to time is not so; that the judgment below was correct.

Attorney-General Akerman and Assistant Attorney-General Hill for the Government. Mr. Cravy, Miller & McCrary for defendant in error.

"The Insurance Company of North America, Company vs. The Norwich and New-York Transportation Company, and No. 121, The Hartford Insurance Company vs. The Same.—Error to the Circuit Court for the District of Connecticut.—The plaintiffs in error in these cases by separate policies insured the defendants to the amount of $18,000 each against loss by fire upon the steamboat City of New-York. The steamer subsequently sunk while on her trip, having collided with a schooner in such a manner as to occasion her also to take fire, (from her furnace.) The theory of the Transportation Company on the trial was, that the boat would not have sunk from the effect of the collision alone, but that the weight of the water she took in, have settled in the sea until it reached her promenade deck, and would have then remained suspended in the water, except for the fire; that the fire so burned her light upper works, (consisting a portion of them,) that they separated and floated off from the lower portion of the steamer, and thereby released her hits weight; which was thus suspended between her main and promenade decks, and that the loss of her upperworks and such light freight as diminished her floating capacity that, having filled, she went to the bottom. Evidence of experts was introduced to sustain this theory, and the Court acquiescing in it instructed the jury that if upon the evidence they should be satisfied that it would have caused to float, so that she could have been towed to a place of safety and the fire not occurred, then the verdict must be for the plaintiffs. The correctness of this ruling is the main question involved here; the plaintiffs in error contending that although the fire may have aggravated and enhanced the results of the collision, still the collision itself was the direct and immediate cause of all the damage, as it was also the cause of the fire.

J. C. Carter and Gen. Pratt, for plaintiffs in error; Jas. A. Hovey and Jere. Halsey, for defendants.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT.

Before Judge Woodruff.

IMPORTANT APPEAL IN BANKRUPTCY.

Judge WOODRUFF rendered a decision yesterday in the appeal against the discharge of John Thompson, who was adjudicated a bankrupt in the District Court. The petitioners were Erastus F. Mead, Jacob H. Brush, and the Merchants' National Bank of New-York, and the amount involved was $1,120,000. In the course of his remarks Judge WOODRUFF said:

"Although I see elements in the case giving rise to the gravest questions, and although looking at the case from a moral point of view, the bankrupt has come far in short of his duty to his creditors in withholding from them the fruits of his labors for the past thirteen years, to whom he owed the largest duty after squandering their money in reckless speculation and adventures, yet the proof is wanting to satisfy my mind of such a state of facts as would justify the Court in acting upon the clear moral principles which present themselves in this case. While it may be true that the sons of the debtor have by skill acquired in business contributed to the acquisition of $500,000 each, it is still more than likely that there is a clear understanding reached by a moment of sentiment between the debtor and the offspring that when the father is free from his embarrassments, he shall have a large share, if not the whole, of the wealth which, perhaps, in violation of his moral duties, is thrown into the hands of his family. Still the judgment of the Court cannot be always on proof, which this record does not furnish, so as to justify the reversal of the order of discharge. The decree of the Court below is affirmed."

THE RIGHTS OF CONSIGNEES—INTERESTING DECISION.

In the United States Circuit Court, yesterday, before Judge WOODRUFF, the matter of R. W. Fears et al. vs. E. F. Kirkland et al. came on for hearing on a motion made by the defendants for a new trial, on the ground that new evidence was discovered, and that errors had been made in the charge to the jury on the recent trial. In the month of October, 1869, J. W. Fears was engaged in the cotton trade in Macon, Ga., as Cubbedge & Hazelhurst, being resident bankers in the same time. The Macon River National Bank of this City was the corresponding and collecting agent of Cubbedge & Hazelhurst, and Kirkland, Wiley & Green, merchants, were the factors and consignees of Fears. On the 17th of October Fears drew his draft for $7,000 as follows: "Macon, Oct. 17, 1869.—On same pay to the order of Cubbedge & Hazelhurst, $7,000, value received, and charge same to account of cotton shipped." W. Fears." On the 19th of October, Fears applied to plaintiffs to discount this draft and offered to give them as security therefor, a bill of lading, a railroad receipt, hereinafter described, for sixty bales of cotton, it being understood between the parties that the cotton then in transit and was to be secured by the said sixty bales of cotton. The plaintiffs accepted the proposition and discounted the draft. The proceeds were applied by Fears to the purchase of sixty bales of cotton. On the 29th of October, this cotton was shipped on the Georgia Central Railroad, and Fears received from the Company the following receipt:—"Received of J. W. Fears, 60 bales of cotton consigned to Kirkland, Wiley & Co., care of forwarding agent Central Railroad, to be forwarded by C. R. to Savannah and thence by steamer to New-York. Freight for the same to be at the rate of $1 40 per 100 pounds, with the right to compress if necessary." On the 30th of October, in pursuance of agreement with the plaintiffs, Fears delivered the foregoing bill of lading to plaintiffs. On the 17th of October this draft was forwarded by the plaintiffs to the East River National Bank, and on the 20th of October the bill of lading was forwarded to the same bank. When the draft, with the original bill of lading, were presented, but payment was refused. Before the arrival of the cotton, the defendants were notified that the railroad receipts had been delivered to the plaintiffs, in pursuance of an arrangement upon the discounting of this draft, that they should have it as security for the payment of the said draft. The cotton arrived in this City Oct. 30, and on the same day the defendants received from the shipping agents in Savannah a copy of the ship's bill of lading, and B. P. Baker, on behalf of the plaintiffs, demanded the cotton from the defendants. They refused to deliver the cotton to the plaintiffs, but sold it and applied the proceeds to their own accounts. The plaintiffs then brought an action, and the jury found a verdict in their favor for $6,877 87, the Court charging that "if the railroad receipt was delivered to the plaintiffs in pursuance of an agreement upon the discounting of the draft, that they should have it as security for the payment of the draft then the defendants were notified of it before they had taken possession of the cotton, then they are liable to the plaintiffs." The motion for a new trial was sought to be sustained, on the grounds that before the delivery of the railroad receipt to the plaintiffs in pursuance of an arrangement upon the discounting of the draft that they should have it as security for the payment of the draft itself, and notice of that fact to the defendants before they had taken possession of the cotton, although the same had been consigned to them by regular bill of lading, no copy of which was attached to the draft, defendants being at the time ignorant of the drawer of the draft for moneys advanced, does not vest in the plaintiffs a legal title to the cotton, so as to enable them to recover in an action for trover. It was alleged, also, that before an action for trover could be maintained the plaintiff must have the right to some specific goods of identification, the case of the Bank of Rochester vs. Jones being referred to in its support. It was contended in opposition to the motion that to sustain the defendant's position the Court must assume that the naked consignee of goods, who has no advance on them, and to whom the skipper was not indebted, has a right to retain them, and to sell and apply their proceeds to his own use, and to do this against the express directions and against the protest of the parties who have advanced money on the faith of the goods, and who have received from the shipper the original carrier's receipt, which was issued for the goods, and the delivery of which was intended by the shipper to pass the title to the goods. Judge WOODRUFF took the papers in the case and reserved his decision.

ALLEGED VIOLATION OF AN INTERNATIONAL TREATY.

The North German Lloyd vs. Hiram Barney.—The action in this cause arose under commercial treaty entered into between the Hanseatic republics of Bremen, Lubec and Hamburg on the one hand, and the United States on the other, bearing date Oct. 20, 1827. The libel was brought by the plaintiffs, the North German Lloyd, a corporation of Bremen, to recover for alleged tonnage duties collected on their vessels in the Port of New-York by the defendant, then Collector, in pursuance of a law of the United States, passed in the year 1862. The defendant, in the collection of the tonnage, acted merely as agent of the United States, and the money was paid into the Treasury, as the plaintiffs allege, in violation of this treaty. The Government demurred to the institution of the suit by the plaintiffs, on the grounds that they have never been in the United States, but always in Bremen; that the vessels were owned there, and bore its flag and sailed from there to the United States; where these duties were collected as a condition of their entrance into the Port of New-York. The Government, therefore, claimed that the North German Lloyd were not the plaintiffs; that they disappeared from the case entirely; that the suit is practically one at the instance of the Hanseatic Republic against the United States to recover duties alleged to have been illegally collected. In answer to the plaintiffs' demand, the defendants interposed the plea of the statute of limitations of the State of New-York; that the plaintiffs did not prosecute the suit until six years had elapsed after the collection was made. Judge WOODRUFF reserved his decision in the case.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT—SOUTHERN DISTRICT.

Before Judge Blatchford.

CONDEMNATION OF A LARGE AMOUNT OF CIGARS.

United States vs. 68,000 Cigars.—The property in this suit belonged to Edward Kunn, of No. 36 Liberty-street, and was seized for alleged discrepancy between the amount of cigars manufactured and the quantity of material used in their manufacture. The case was called on yesterday, but no appearance for the plaintiffs, on behalf of the claimant, a decree by default was granted condemning the property.

SUPREME COURT—GENERAL TERM—APRIL 5.

Before Chief-Justice Ingraham, and Judges Barnard and Cardozo.

THE HARLEM DEPOT PROPERTY.

The Harlem Railroad Company vs. Kip et al.—It will be remembered, as already fully published in the Times, that an application was some time since made to the Court to compel a surrender of some property belonging to defendants, at a price fixed by valuation, on the ground that it was necessary for the use of plaintiff in building the new Harlem Depot at the junction of Fourth-avenue and Forty-second-street. The matter was referred to a referee, who made his report, which plaintiff claimed. On motion to confirm this report, Judge CARDOZO rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff and adversely to the referee's report, holding that the property was necessary to plaintiff. From this judgment of Judge CARDOZO, defendants now appeal. Its their points urged on the motion, defendants contend that the property is not necessary for a depot; that there are other property in the neighborhood equally adapted, and that plaintiff has even sold property in the same neighborhood better adapted to its purposes.

Decision reserved.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—PART I.—APRIL 5.

Before Judge Sutherland and a Jury.

Heine vs. Meyer.—This is an action to recover $5,000 for the value of work, labor and materials used in connection with the alteration of the old Vestry-street Church to a five story warehouse. A portion of the old church wall was to be built upon in making the alteration, and after the work had been partially performed, the further progress was stopped by the Superintendent of Public Buildings, who claimed that the side walls were not plumb, and required that they be pulled down. The plaintiff and defendant differed as to whose duty it was to pull down the walls. The defendant, thereupon, after a survey by the Department, hired a new builder, tore down the work already done, and rebuilt his building, using part of the old side wall. Plaintiff now claims the value of the work thus torn down, and defendant offsets the claim by an equal amount of damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of the delay in rebuilding. Case still on.

Townsend & Levinger for plaintiff; Thomas J. McKee and Thomas Allison for defendant.

COMMON PLEAS—EQUITY TERM—APRIL 5.

Before Judge Robinson.

THE WILSON BAKERY EXPLOSION.

Larkin vs. Wilson.—This is an action by Mrs. Larkin, a widow, to compel the execution of a deed of a lot in Brooklyn. It is claimed by Mrs. Larkin that her husband, in his life-time, purchased from the defendant a lot, the deed of which he had on his person at the time an explosion took place in the defendant's bakery in Cherry-street, whereby Larkin was injured so that he subsequently died, and that at the time of such injury, or while Larkin was in the hospital, defendant obtained possession of the deed. Another suit between the same parties was tried some time since in the Court of Common Pleas, involving the same facts as this, and of which a very full report was given in the Times. In the former case, the plaintiff and her witness charged against the defendant that he caused his bakery to be set on fire, (a charge which had been investigated by the proper authorities and dismissed) but in the present case they make the additional point that the defendant's name is not Wilson, but Brown. The defendant denies the whole story of the sale of a lot to Larkin in his life-time, or that any deed had ever been executed or delivered, or was intended to be. The case still continued, under directions of the Court that defendant shall establish his genealogy.

WEDNESDAY, April 5—P. M.

Messrs. LEONARD, SHELDON and FOSTER sold the Treasury today $3,000,000 of United States 5-20 Bonds for the Sinking Fund, at 109.85 ⅋ cent. and accrued Interest in Gold, which in Currency, with the premium on the accrued Interest, is equal to 111⅛ ⅋ cent. At the Stock Exchange, the exact price of the day in the open market. Other offers from the dealers in the Public Funds were tendered to the amount of $7,019,000, but nearly all above the market by ⅛@⅛ ⅋ cent. At the close of the day the 5-20s of 1867 were 111⅛@111⅜ ⅋ cent., while Gold was 110⅛ ⅋ cent., the almost uniform quotation throughout the day. The difference against 5-20s as compared with Gold, allowing for accrued interest, is a trifle less than ½ ⅋ cent. The difference in favor of the long 6 ⅋ cents, of 1881, at 116⅛ ⅋ cent., as compared with Gold, (accrued Interest being taken into the account,) is nearly 4 ⅋ cent. The Currency 6 ⅋ cents, loaned to the Pacific Roads are 115⅛ and accrued Interest—the only United States Bonds sold by the rule of the Exchange in this way—which gives them also the advantage over Gold of nearly 4 ⅋ cent.

The Gold market is tame at 110⅛ ⅋ cent. It does not look much like going higher, although Exchange is 110 ⅋ cent., and the Customs demand for Gold this week will exceed by about $1,000,000 the sales from the Treasury advertised for to-morrow noon. The Exports of Domestic Produce from New-York for the week amount to $5,525,000, including $1,300,000 War material shipped to France, about the last shipment. It is supposed, under contracts in this country, with the late "Government of Defence." The export demand for American Gold Coin is light. The movement in this direction is postponed much beyond the general calculation heretofore made on the large Trade balances, running up, to all appearances, against the United States.

The flurry in the Money market is pretty much over, but the rates have not returned to the low figures prevailing through the month of March. On Call Loan the quotation of the day was 6@7 ⅋ cent. Most of the Brokers paid 7 ⅋ cent. on Railway Collateral. There is no abatement in the speculative activity at the Stock Exchange, and there is not much higgling between the Brokers and the Money-lenders at Bank or on the Street about the rates of Interest, the offerings of Money, being reasonably easy. On prime Merchant paper the rate is also 6@7 ⅋ cent.

At the Stock Exchange Boards and in the Long Room of the Exchange the business of the day was large, but pretty generally distributed over the Southern State Bonds, the Western and Pacific Railway Bonds, and the New-York, Western and Reading Railway Stocks, and also inclusive of Western Telegraph and the other Miscellaneous Shares.

The New-York Stock and Scrip were firm on most of the sales of Monday, and Lake Shore recovered from the depression of Monday, and sold above 102½ ⅋ cent. In Reading the transactions were very large in the forenoon at 108⅛@108 ⅋ cent., and it seems probable that a good many of the holders at 108@108 ⅋ cent. were realizing their profits, although the talk of the Street is of much higher figures before the movement subsides. The Delaware and Lackawanna, New-Jersey Central, and Morris and Essex, as Coal carriers, are also going up, but the precise nature of the favorable turn in the Coal trade is not yet understood, or, we should rather say, it is not altogether relied on. The stock of the Ohio and Mississippi is in renewed favor this Afternoon and sold above 48@48⅜ ⅋ cent. Of the $2,500,000 of new 7 ⅋ cent. Bonds of the Company to contract the gauge of the line and to equip it for business on the Baltimore and Ohio and Marietta and Cincinnati gauge, it is understood that the Baltimore and Ohio Company will underwrite for $1,250,000 at 80 ⅋ cent., and the new parties in the management in New-York will make a round bid on Monday, the 10th inst., for the other $1,250,000 at the same minimum figure.

After the late Boards the following quotations were made as compared with Tuesday night. The Railway prices were generally firm, but there was rather less excitement in the general market. Gold quiet at 110⅛: Exchange, 109⅞@110 ⅋ cent.; Money, 6@7 ⅋ cent.; the Public Funds, 111⅛@111⅜ for the 5-20s of 1867.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, yesterday, a bill was introduced, but not acted upon, allowing Minister SCHENCK full pay during the time that he is detained at Washington. The resolution directing the Judiciary Committee to report measures for the suppression of Southern disorders was then taken up and debated until 3½ o'clock, at which time it was agreed to take a vote on the amendments. A substitute, offered by Mr. THURMAN, of Ohio, directing the Committee to inquire into the powers of the Federal Government to suppress these disorders, and to report by bill or otherwise, according to the result of their inquiries, was rejected by a party vote—yeas 12, nays 36. An amendment offered by Mr. STOCKTON, of New-Jersey, striking out the preliminary statements, and simply directing the report of a bill to enable the President and the Courts to punish and prevent organized violence, and secure the rights of citizens, was also rejected—yeas 19, nays 30. The resolution was then amended, directing the Committee to report as early as practicable, and adopted by a vote of 36 to 13. Subsequently the report of the San Domingo Commissioners and a Message of the President on the same subject were submitted. After some discussion it was decided that the Message and report be printed, and Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, be allowed to make a speech on the subject Friday, no one else being permitted to speak.

A bill to give Gen. SCHENCK his salary while at Washington, was also submitted to the House, but not acted on. The bill for the enforcement of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution was then taken up and the debate continued, but no new arguments or facts were brought forward. An amendment was offered by Mr. SHELLABARGER, by which the declaration of martial law is excluded, and the suspension of the habeas corpus is allowed only when the Government shall require it as an act of suppressing violence. The debate today is to be confined to amendments, and Mr. SHELLABARGER gave notice that he should move the previous question at the close of the day's session.

EUROPE.

There is little that is new concerning the fight near Paris. The official report of M. FICARD, in summing up the result, says Chatillon was captured with 2,000 men. FLOURENS and DUVAL are dead, and HENRY a prisoner. Twenty-two members of the Commune have resigned, and M. ASSY has been imprisoned by his own followers. It is reported that fighting continued until evening on Tuesday, and the Nationals were completely routed, 15,000 insurgents having been made prisoners. There is said to be consternation in the City of Paris. GARIBALDI refuses to take the command. The latest reports say that cannonading continues about Paris.

The King and Queen of Sweden are recovering. The opposition in the Spanish Cortes numbers 140 members. Ministerial changes are said to be imminent in Spain. A motion to impeach the present members of the Cabinet, it is said, will be made.

GENERAL.

City of Mexico advices, to the 20th ult., state that the re-election of President JUAREZ is conceded, as the Fusionists have accomplished nothing. Señor ROMERO will leave the Ministry, through unpopularity, but will be sent to Washington as a faithful public servant. The election canvass is attended with increasing excitement, and political outrages are reported in the provinces. Several assassinations are reported in Guadalajara as committed in one day. The discovery of a practical route for the Tehuantepec Canal is causing much rejoicing.

The latest advices from Connecticut give a plurality of nine to ENGLISH on the one hand, and nineteen to JEWELL on the other. In either case the election must go to the Legislature, as there are enough scattering votes to overcome these insignificant majorities. The Legislature being Republican, will, of course, elect JEWELL as Governor.

The residence of Hon. JOHN COOK, at Topeka, Kansas, was burned on Tuesday morning. Mr. COOK, who was absent with three children when the house took fire, was awakened by the noise and passed two of his children out of the window, when he was suffocated by the smoke and fainted, and was pulled out of the house by neighbors, leaving a little girl, three years old, who was burned to death.

TIMOTHY E. LYNCH, a young rough of East Boston, died in a Boston Police Station, on Tuesday night, from injuries received in resisting arrest. A mob of roughs aided LYNCH, giving battle to some twenty policemen, in which the latter were compelled to use their clubs.

The Methodist Episcopal Conference of the Wyoming District commenced its annual session in Norwich, N. Y., yesterday, Bishop JAMES presiding. The session will probably last a week.

Father TAYLOR, the venerable minister of the Seamen's Bethel, died at Boston, yesterday, at the age of seventy-seven. Many vessels in the harbor displayed their flags on half-mast, out of respect to Father TAYLOR's memory.

WM. F. HUGHES, President of the Philadelphia City Bank, died yesterday morning. He leaves a fortune of $300,000. A year since, he had a life-size statue cast, designed as a monument for his grave.

The new head-quarters building and reading-room for the National Soldiers' Home, at Dayton, Ohio, will be formally opened on Tuesday next. Ex-Secretary COX and other prominent persons will participate in the exercises.

South American advices to Feb. 25 state that the revolution at Montevideo continues, and causes a most deplorable state of affairs. Business is dull and the people disheartened.

The eighty-first session of the New-York Methodist Episcopal Conference will convene at Peekskill today, Bishop D. W. CLARK presiding. The Conference includes New-York, Poughkeepsie, Rhinebeck, Prattsville, Ellenville and Newburg, representing 223 churches and $2,500,000 worth of property.

The schooner Francis Nelson, of and from St. George, N. B., for Boston, loaded with lumber, ran ashore on York Beach, N. B., a day or two since, and lay there at last accounts. The revenue cutters Dobbin and McCulloch went to her assistance, but were unable to haul her off.

EDWARD H. BULLOTT, the Binghamton burglar and murderer, was taken to Elmira, N. Y., yesterday, and re-sentenced to death, in accordance with the decision of the Court of Appeals in his case. BULLOTT will be executed at Binghamton on the 18th of May next.

The municipal elections in Missouri are considered favorable to the Democrats. BROWN's majority for Mayor of St. Louis is 2,000, being behind the ticket. WM. E. LEE is elected Mayor of St. Paul, Minn., by a small majority. The Republicans of Minneapolis elected their Mayoralty candidate, R. R. ANDS, by 400 majority.

The New-Jersey Senate has killed the bill forbidding the manufacture and sale of adulterated liquors.

We are indebted to Capt. RAMSONE, of the Hamburg steam ship Allemania, which reached this port yesterday, for valued additions to our continental files.

The Meeting To-Night.

The meeting which will be held at the Cooper Institute to-night affords all classes, who desire to see honesty once more recognized as an active principle of government, an opportunity of standing by their opinions. The object in view ought not to be confined to any one party. Decent citizens, who do not desire to see a system of government worthy only of the Dark Ages established in New-York in the present era, may reasonably be expected to unite in the attempt to exercise some sort of check over the clique—for it does not deserve to be called a party—now exercising a Napoleonic sway in this City. Many of our leading merchants and bankers signed the requisition for the meeting, and the audience to-night will doubtless represent the most intelligent classes of the community. It is the duty of every man to give all the encouragement he can to those who are about to represent the people as against corrupt factions.

We observe that our contemporary, the Tribune, tells the gentlemen who have undertaken this new crusade against misgovernment that they have before them a "Herculean task," that they seem to have "little experience in practical politics," and that they "do not yet comprehend its magnitude and its difficulties." All this seems very much like what people call "throwing cold water" on the movement, and it certainly is totally unnecessary to render our capitalists and private citizens more afraid to struggle for their own liberation from the Ring than they were before. We admit that the task before the reformers is a difficult one—but happily it is not impossible, and now is the time to take the difficulties by the throat and squeeze the life out of them. All these same "difficulties" are well understood, and it is useless at this moment to dress them out and stick them up like so many scarecrows. What men want in such a work is encouragement, not a wet blanket. The truth is that the "difficulties" are already so great a bugbear that they have deterred many thousands from fighting against them—and yet had the fight been made long ago, we should be so much nearer victory now. Before such an organization as that of the Tammany Ring can be broken down, there must be a good deal of hard fighting done, and, no matter when it was begun, there would always be somebody or other able to say to the reformers, "Gentlemen, you have a Herculean task before you." Well, then, all the more reason why we should set about doing it, without further shilly-shallying. The great fact to be considered by the new Council is this: public opinion is now ripe for some sort of action. Only show the people how they can combine with advantage—what specific reform they can aim at—and you will find no lack of supporters. The Press has not been actively at work for nothing. All this time it has been creating public opinion—another task not to be accomplished in a day—and now a very large proportion of the people will come forward to support a central organization which is known to be efficient and honest. We presume we may trust the Council not to give their affairs into the hands of a man who will "sell out" as soon as the enemy offer him $10,000 a year, which is what happened to that melancholy wreck, the "Citizens' Association."

Respectable Democrats cannot pretend that a Government which refuses to tell the public the amount of the City debt, which has suppressed the official accounts of receipts and expenditure since 1868, which calls in a few private citizens to give a white-washing certificate instead of ordering the Controller to publish the report of the Auditor of Accounts, which raises $22,000,000 a year by taxation, and leaves almost every function of municipal government unperformed, and which now aims at placing in the hands of four men absolute power over the City revenues—we say that no respectable Democrat can honestly believe this to be a good kind of Government. The people who at present rule us admit no responsibility to the public. They have the Executive, the Legislature, the Judiciary, all in their own hands, and they snap their fingers at the people and say, "Do your best or your worst, we care nothing for you." All this can be checked, and some of the speakers to-night will point out the way—as we have done before. Among the speakers is Hon. W. M. EVARTS—a gentleman who stands at the very head of his profession, and whose name is identified with every good cause. Eminent lawyers are never eager to come from their offices for the sake of taking part in a public meeting, and Mr. EVARTS shows true public spirit—that kind of spirit which will enable us to get a good Government here if other people will imitate it—in sacrificing his convenience for the welfare of his fellow-citizens. Judge G. E. BARRETT, Rev. H. WARD BEECHER, Drs. BELLOWS and CROOK, and other gentlemen will also address the meeting. Let every man attend it who can possibly get into the hall, and thus support those who are willing to help the public if the public will help themselves.

The President's Message on San Domingo.

The text of the President's Message fully bears out the statement we have already published as to its tenor and recommendations. If the calumnies circulated with so much virulence have ever changed the belief of any honest citizen in the purity of motive and integrity of conduct on the part of the President, the terms of this Message must re-establish it. The President gives a manly and straightforward account of all the stages through which the San Domingo question has passed. Against the vague and unsupported allegations of his detractors, he places a few simple and unvarnished facts, having the double guarantee of his personal honor, and that of the newly-returned Commissioners. If the President has been more inflexible in this matter than was strictly politic, he finds an apology which every high-principled man will appreciate in the bitterness and unfairness with which his motives have been misrepresented. A man of strong will and conscious rectitude does not bend readily to diplomatic shifts and expedients. Accustomed to a straight and vigorous advance in what he conceives to be the line of duty, he may even underrate the importance of deterring circumstances, and of claims that are really more comprehensive than the special question at issue. If the President has fallen into any such mistake, he is chargeable with it no longer. As in 1869, so now, he throws himself and his policy upon the judgment of the country, "against whose will," he repeats, "I have no policy to enforce."

The President shows none of the undue haste, attributed to him by opponents, to have action taken upon the report of the Commissioners. Facts so varied and important as those yesterday submitted to Congress, require leisurely consideration and full discussion. The President reiterates his unaltered, or rather strengthened, conviction that "the interests of our country and San Domingo alike invite the annexation of the Republic." He is willing, at the bidding of the American people, to confess this to be an error of judgment, but he counsels that the public opinion, which is wiser than that of any one man, should have time to master the facts before delivering its verdict. He concludes an eminently judicious and timely Message with an appeal for that very ordinary fairness which has been so frequently denied to him. "No man can hope to perform duties so delicate and responsible as pertain to the Presidential office without sometimes incurring the hostility of those who deem their opinions and wishes treated with insufficient consideration." However much of a truism this may appear, it is one which has been frequently lost sight of lately. We feel assured that after the frank explanations, and well-considered recommendations of the present Message, the "truism" will not be lost sight of to so great an extent in the future. The President relies, not without reason, "upon the candor and intelligence of a free people whose best interests he has striven to subserve." In the present instance he may do more. He may count upon their warm approval, and on their cordial recognition of the fact that he is becoming still more thoroughly awake to the varied responsibilities of his position, and, by patient and honest endeavor, more thoroughly qualified to discharge them. He may safely despise the calumnies of the slanderers in the Press to whom he refused office, and who follow him with every species of pitiful malice.

Woman and Political Reform.

It is often asserted that if the educated women of New-York had a share in its Government, the abuses we labor under would speedily cease to exist. This argument is freely urged in private society, and the advocates of female suffrage are confident with Mr. MILL, of its absolute soundness. Women, they say, are less sordid than men, the purity of morals and manners is dearer to them, neatness and order are of greater importance in their eyes, and therefore their voice in the management of a great City must needs have a salutary effect. Besides, it is added, what renders possible all this wretched corruption, this debasing spectacle of the vilest persons in the community clambering to its highest places and rioting in its treasury, but the existence of a huge army of ignorant voters, who are the merest tools of the bad men who control them? If intelligent women also cast votes, this evil would at least be neutralized; and, apart from the positive good thus to be attained, is it not monstrous, we are asked, that tens of thousands of educated American women should be excluded from all share in public affairs, in order that a horde of ignorant men should tyrannize over our entire society?

It is certainly is not easy to escape from the force and pertinency of these questions. In New-York a pressing necessity is felt for infusing into the aggregate body of voters a greater amount of intelligence, culture, and patriotism than now exists. It is not that the average voter necessarily means to be base, but that his ignorance, his prejudices, and his vanity are so worked upon by the cunning and unscrupulous as to make his conduct probably what it would be if he were base. This needs correction; and, assuming that the suffrage cannot be taken under any circumstances from those that already have it, the sole obvious remedy appears to be that of giving it to a better class. You cannot trust to education alone, as applied to the existing voters or their natural successors, for their education is in the hands of persons whose interest it is to perpetuate ignorance. Consequently, the elevation of the average standard can only be arrived at by conferring the suffrage upon an additional number of educated persons. This, of course, is innovation, and to innovation there are always powerful objections. Yet, as BACON says, every medicine is an innovation, and he that will not apply new remedies must expect new evils.

Of course one plain and difficult objection is, that any practicable movement of this sort must prove useless, because it cannot be kept within limits; in other words, because, if the servant votes, as well as the mistress, they might as well pair, without casting ballots at all. This opens the door to speculations on which we will not at present enter; but it likewise prompts one very serious reflection, which cannot just now be made too prominent. The great mass of our ignorant voters are quite unaffected by the higher kind of female influence. They do not look for it, or require it. The behests of their masters are implicitly obeyed, without any promptings from the domestic hearth. Nothing that women could do would make these men employ their privilege of suffrage more effectually for evil. But women can make voters of another sort work for good much more effectually than they do now. The systematic neglect of political duty that we have lately stigmatized as characteristic of our affluent and educated classes, can here be vigorously attacked, on ground to which none can demur. Clashing opinions concerning female rights or female suffrage can be waived for a time in presence of the common enemy of honesty, enlightenment, and pure government. Let the educated women of New-York, then, the wives and sisters of our professional and business leaders, set themselves to the task of inducing their husbands and brothers to discharge their political duties. Whether these ladies think that they themselves ought to vote or not, they certainly know that their husbands and brothers ought to do so. Their omission to fulfill their trust in this respect has assisted, in combination with other causes, to bring us into serious straits. Property, social order, even religion itself, is involved in the common danger. The public meeting at the Cooper Institute to-night is one of many signs that the respectable citizens of the Metropolis are beginning to realize the magnitude of the perils that threaten them. Will not the ladies of New-York now do their part, energetically and persistently, toward overthrowing the enemy? Will they not insist that neglect of political duty and responsibility is a disgrace to any intelligent man? We beg them to believe that there never was a time when their powerful influence was more urgently needed, or when its speedy and active exercise would be more likely to benefit the most important interests of society.

Eccentric Wills.

Eccentric wills appear to be the fashion of the day. One of the odd turns which the fancy of testators has lately taken is to bequeath their bodies to various whimsical purposes. One medical gentleman thought it would be a graceful mark of his esteem to leave his skeleton nicely wired and jointed, to his professional friend. His wife, however, has disputed the bequest, and it may become a question for the Courts how far a man may be said to have a property in his own corpse.

An ingenious Frenchman paid his mistress the rare and touching compliment of a mourning ring, to be manufactured from the iron in his blood, which his chemical researches assured him would be just sufficient for the purpose. The freak of that Massachusetts hatter, who desired to have his skin converted into a drum-head, and his other remains into compost, has been duly recorded in these columns. Perhaps if this infection spreads, we may improve on these oddities, and it will become the correct thing to distribute one's bones, nicely mounted, let us say, and inclosed in suitable caskets, to one's friends, after death, as we now leave trinkets or locks of hair.

Another phase of this mania for singularity has taken the shape of devises of property to the most improbable uses. A San Francisco lawyer, with a wife and family, died and left two millions to the municipal corporation. Had he been a New-Yorker, we might have explained his action on the supposition that he belonged to the Ring, and that his bequest was simply conscience money. M. BONARD's transfer of all his estate to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals is not altogether remarkable, since he is said to have had no living friend, but among the dumb creatures to whom he has thus evinced his gratitude. It may have been his example that influenced Mr. MARSH, a wealthy bachelor of New-Jersey, to disappoint a number of affectionate and expectant cousins by leaving nearly four hundred thousand dollars for the use, benefit, and behoof of his horses for the period of ten years. His entire farm of eighty acres is dedicated to their support, $1,200 a year is set aside for the hire of a competent and kind attendant, who shall devote himself exclusively to their wants, and they are to have all the luxuries in the equine mess which these hundred dollars apiece will provide for them. And the two executors are encouraged to carry out the provisions of this curious will by a premium of ten thousand dollars each. At the expiration of the allotted time, the farm is to be sold, and the outraged cousins are to receive tardy balm for their disappointment. What is to become then of the four-footed legatees, should any be still surviving, we are not informed. Doubtless they will be sold with the farm, and become themselves, by a striking reverse of fortune, part of the compensation to their now envious rivals, the cousins aforesaid.

Such unexpected aberrations from the usual course of human action serve to exhibit, in a very marked degree, the diversity, one might almost say the perversity, of the human reason. Whether these eccentric dispositions of property are wise or right, when judged by the strict rules of moral responsibility, it is not now necessary to discuss. With such a vast amount of human misery to be relieved throughout the world, it may seem to many something worse than an oddity to divert to less pressing needs the means of alleviating it. Let people, after all, to the end of time, will insist on doing as they please with their own, and no earthly tribunal can very well call them to account for their stewardship. A catholic charity may have a garland for BONARD and MARSH, as well as for PEABODY, and it is only perhaps a selfish jealousy that will make the latter's seem to most men a worthier crown.

Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Income Tax-Payers.

The lofty patriotism which, in order to crush the rebellion, was willing every male relative should be a Brigadier-General, is being fitly supplemented by the recent great uprising in this City of those who demand in future a vigorous collection of the revenue from other people.

Mr. NATHANIEL SANDS, who, for ten thousand dollars a year kindly aids Tammany Hall in "doing good by stealth," and does not "blush to find it fame," has seen of late many indications on the part of the public of an increasing shyness of his little trap labeled "Citizens' Association"—although that deservedly respected citizen, Mr. PETER COOPER, is still willing as ever to hold the string or sit for decoy. SANDS has therefore shifted his scenes, recast his dummies, and is bringing out "The Anti-Income Tax Association." In a printed circular before us signed "MINON WINSLOW, Secretary," it is represented that one of the special "benefits which may accrue (to members) from the efforts of this Association," is that "Collectors may be enjoined from collecting from them their tax," (sic.) Although we have no special fondness for taxes, and certainly none for the Income tax, yet we are constrained to caution our readers against taking stock in this new nostrum of the sedative and soothing WINSLOW. There is a very obstinate little provision of the Internal Revenue law (see section 10, act of March 3, 1867) which forbids the enjoining of Collectors, and neither blisters nor boluses will be able to remove it. We apprehend, however, that a little patience on the part of the public is all that is now necessary. Commissioner-General PLEASONTON, before the tax becomes payable, will undoubtedly succeed in exempting all the income, and thus any necessity for injunctions and protests, or even for the repeal of the law, will be obviated. The brilliancy of this little flank movement on Congress promises to eclipse entirely the heavy business inaugurated by that fatile reformer, Mr. SHEDDING SANDS.

"Gift Enterprise" Robberies.

Human nature seems to gravitate toward those spots where chance and cheating are in partnership to capture simpletons. From the millionaire bulls and bears of Wall-street, down through a long gradation to the poorest of penny-pitchers, the absorbing desire to get something out of nothing overmasters all other cravings, and stamps out all other and more honorable plans. And, by allowing themselves to be thus cheaply duped, men are kept in a chronic state of unrest and demoralization, and by the infection of their example scatter the contagion through the entire community. Because one person has vaulted suddenly into wealth, over the backs of hundreds or thousands who, as suddenly, have sounded the depths of poverty, the insane greed of gold gets fast hold of all who knew the "lucky" individual, and a headlong rush is made to glean where the harvest has already been gathered. And, of course, the result is widespread disappointment, and, to many, ruinous loss.

A notable instance of this general anxiety to get rich without labor is exhibited in a grand "co-operative" scheme lately in full progress in a Broadway store. Without the indorsement of a name, either respectable or otherwise, this great fraud on the public offers one thousand prizes to the purchasers of three hundred thousand tickets, in the form of a raffle. Obviously two hundred and ninety-nine out of every three hundred tickets are predestined to draw blanks, or, to put it plainly, two hundred and ninety-nine thousand investors are guaranteed that they will be cheated out of their dollars. The performance began bravely enough on Monday, and it is asserted that a paltry half-dozen out of hundreds, perhaps thousands, of gulls, drew a worthless picture or a cracked piano apiece. On the second day, the crowd of anxious ones increased, but the favors of fortune lagged far behind hungry expectation.

The lane was not so long, however, but that at last it had a turning, though not just the one to bring smiles to the faces of either the deceivers or their dupes. A young aspirant for sudden wealth, who had a Bowery cast of countenance, and clearly was not deficient in personal spirit, invested ten dollars, in the confident expectation that ten tickets would insure him all the luck there was in the wheel. But when, in rapid and ruinous succession, the wheel's revolutions returned him nothing but blanks, the idea suddenly struck him that possibly the whole affair was a robbery, and that the wheels contained nothing besides blank tickets. If this thought had only occurred to him before he had parted with his ten dollars, or if a single ticket only had thus turned out, things might have remained in a satisfactory state for all parties concerned. But the speculator was indignant, and denounced the scheme as a fraud. Alleging loudly that there were no prizes provided for, while blanks were in bountiful supply, he had the good luck to put a prompt stop to the sale of tickets, and at the same time bring the revolving wheels of fortune to an ominous stand-still. Then came an interesting tableau. The Police were called in to perform the double duty of keeping the peace and examining the contents of the wheels. Meanwhile the trade in tickets languished. The collapse came on apace. Before night the whole concern was seized by the Police, the performances stopped, and the proprietors arrested. The two days' experiment upon public credulity probably filched five, thousand or ten thousand dollars from the pockets of the deluded victims. The sudden suppression of the scheme has, however, prevented a much larger loss of money on the part of thousands who could not have afforded to lose their dollars. And now, may we not hope that some few fools will have learned wisdom from this last failure of their attempt to get something out of nothing?

MINOR TOPICS.

In the Senate, on Tuesday, Mr. CASSERLY, of California, expressed "much surprise" that anybody should speak of Tammany as the controlling Democratic Party of New-York. Mr. CASSERLY must be a gentleman very subject to fits of surprise. He wondered that "such an assertion should be seriously made, and denied its correctness." If Mr. CASSERLY meant this for a joke, all we can say is that much better samples of the article have previously come to us from California. Mr. CASSERLY will not thrive as a "jokist." If he meant his statement in earnest, then Senator CASSERLY had better come back to New-York and study what ingoing on here. We do not accuse him of being an ignorant man, but his remark in the Senate shows a deplorable want of information on subjects of the kind which active politicians usually think worthy of attention. Let Mr. CASSERLY come and talk with a few respectable Democrats here, and they will very soon tell him what Tammany really is.

The defeat of the Parisian Communists has been followed by the charges of treachery and the general recrimination so inevitable among Frenchmen in disaster. The reign of terror is reported as being continued within the city. The latest evidence furnished of its existence is the arrest of the Archbishop of Paris on a charge of conspiracy. If anything more were wanted to stimulate the ardor of the provincial levies outside of Paris, the stricks of bad policy will do it. The peasantry may be relied on to fight for the Church, and the indignation of all moderate men in France will be excited by this outrage on a very tribunal and popular prelate. If the Government troops are prepared to follow up their success with vigor, the Commune will be forced to its last stand on the hill of Montmartre, and will be driven to die "like a poisoned rat in a hole."

Last week's deaths from small-pox show a total of thirty-four, being an increase of six over the previous week, as might have been conjectured from the steady increase of seizures in the earlier weeks of March. On the other hand, we have to note a decrease of eight in the number of new cases, the total for the week ending April 1 being eighty-three. Dr. RUSSEL reports that during the first quarter of the present year the total of deaths from small-pox has been 201—"exactly the same number as in the first quarter of last year." Dr. MORRIS omits to give us the total number of seizures for the same periods—a highly-necessary element in the comparison—and also omits to notice that the end of the present quarter sees us entering upon the new one with statistics of much more threatening dimensions than in 1870. The vigor with which the work of vaccination is being prosecuted is highly commendable, even if it be a little late.

The Senate, yesterday, reached a vote on the Sherman resolution. The amendments offered by Senators THURMAN and STOCKTON were rejected, and the resolution, with the addition of the words that the Committee report as soon as possible, was adopted by a vote of 36 yeas to 12 nays. The resolution as offered is as follows:

That as organized bands of desperate and lawless men, mainly composed of soldiers in the late rebel army, armed, disciplined, disguised and bound by oaths to secrecy and secrecy, have by force, terror and violence, subverted all civil authority in the late insurrectionary States, thus overthrowing the safety of persons and property, and all those rights which are the primary basis and object of all civil government, and which are expressly guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States to all its citizens, and such Courts are rendered utterly powerless by organized perjury to punish crimes, therefore the Judiciary Committee is instructed to report a bill or bills that will enable the President and the Courts of the United States to execute the laws, punish such organized violence, and secure to all citizens the rights so guaranteed to them.

Without giving names, we can instance a concern for the savings of the people that has gone into the Tammany Ring securities to the amount of $4,336,000, while holding only $756,000 in United States stocks. The savings intrusted to its managers amount to $8,128,000. Nearly forty per cent is in City and County bonds, and less than ten per cent is in United States stocks. Four years ago the bank held $1,820,780 in United States stocks, and $1,567,000 in City and County bonds. Another case: A bank for the savings of the people holds in trust $1,874,000, and has taken Tammany securities to the amount of $1,388,000, or two-thirds the whole sum committed to its charge. The amount of United States stocks held is $259,000. Four years ago this concern held $520,000 United States and $288,000 City and County stocks.

Our readers who study the weather must have noted the great accuracy of the late prognostications that have emanated from the Bureau of the Signal Office at Washington. The reports and the probabilities based upon them are compiled and digested with very great care and skill. To that very numerous class to whom the state of the weather is a subject of vital importance, the value of these reports is daily becoming better recognized. Increased correctness and fullness may be expected to follow the continued experience of the officials devoted to this service, and must eventually make it one of the most indispensable of the minor departments of national business.

ALBANY.

The Viaduct Bill Signed by the Governor—The Canal Claims Bill Passed—Proceedings Monday—The Registry Law Passed in the Senate.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, April 5.—The evening session of the Senate was consumed in the discussion of Canal Claim bills, all of which were ordered to a third reading. A large number of local bills passed the Assembly, but none of them were of general interest. TWEED's bill, amending the New-York Registry, which was ordered to a third reading, passed the Senate this morning by a party vote, and was brought down to the Assembly this evening, when FERRY attempted to rush it through by moving that it be referred to the Committee on Cities, with instructions to report complete, thus preventing its being discussed in Committee of the Whole. The motion could only be carried, under the rules, by general consent, and GOODSON objected. The bill was then referred to the Committee on Cities, from which it was immediately reported, and now goes on General Orders. This bill renders the Registry law almost useless, and it would have been much more manly in TWEED to have supported CHAMBERS's bill repealing the law altogether, than to have accomplished substantially the same thing in an underhand way. When CHAMBERS's bill was introduced, TWEED said he could not support it unless the Republican Senators were willing, as it would be a violation of an agreement with them last Winter, as a consideration for their support of his charter, and yet he puts through a bill amending the registry, much a way as to destroy all its vitality. By this contemptible trick, TWEED has lost the only good reputation he had left, that of being a man who stood up to all his agreements of whatever nature and kind.

THE VIADUCT BILL SIGNED.

The Governor this evening signed the Viaduct Railroad bill, one of the most villainous Ring jobs of the session. Some people had hopes that he would veto the bill, but when did Gov. HOFFMAN ever veto a measure that was to put $5,000,000 of the City's money in the hands of the Ring?

Unimportant Legislative Business—Prospects of the Two Per Cent. Tax Levy—Economic Economy in Public Printing—The Blackwell's Island Bridge.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Wednesday, April 5, 1871.

No important bills were up in either House of the morning session today, although a good deal of minor legislation was disposed of. The two per cent. tax levy, which has lain quite above the night it was ordered to a third reading in the Senate, still rests where TWEED leaves it, and is getting to be the subject of general speculation and rumor. Some think that the Ring have abandoned the measure altogether, and intend to hatchpass a regular tax levy on the hundred of January, while others of the opinion, as indicated in yesterday's dispatch, that the two per cent. bill is to pass the Senate at the proper time, and undergo such amendments in the Assembly as will cover all the schemes of the Ring which amendments are to be concurred in by the Senate at the final moment, on the plea of necessity, growing out of the want of time to do any better.

PUBLIC PRINTING—DEMOCRATIC ECONOMY.

A spicy debate sprang up in the Assembly this morning on a resolution to print several thousand copies of the transactions of the American Institute. Mr. JACOBS, the Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, opposed the resolution, and made a pathetic but fruitless appeal to his Democratic associates to stem the tide of wasteful extravagance and useless expenditures of the public money in printing that had characterized the Legislature for the last two years. He warned them that their wily opponents, the Republicans, would make use of it in the shape of a campaign document next Fall. HALLOCK, of Rockland, also opposed the resolution, not because it was a "job" of the Argus, but because, as he said, the "transactions of the American Institute" were only the inventions of a set of men who cultivated pumpkins and squashes on the side walks, and not one of whom ever did a day's work on a farm in his life. The resolution was passed, however, notwithstanding the pathetic appeal of JACOBS, and the bulletinish of HALLOCK, and the American Institute transactions will go into print as usual. Were this the only "job" which has been carried through the Legislature for the benefit of the Democratic State printers, who last year got their contract extended three years, contrary to law, by a simple clause in the Supply bill, (which JACOBS did not oppose by the way) it would be of little consequence; but, as I stated, in the course of his remarks on the resolution, that the cost of public printing this year would amount to nearly five hundred thousand dollars. Well might the Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means forewarn the Republicans would make use of this against the party; for he is fully aware of the fact that under the last Republican Legislature, (1869,) when Mr. SHEDDING was Chairman of that Committee, the cost of public printing was less than two hundred thousand dollars.

BLACKWELL'S ISLAND BRIDGE.

Senator GREEN's Blackwell's Island Bridge bill, which passed the Senate some time ago, went through the Assembly on Tuesday evening, after being amended in several important particulars by Mr. PARSON, of Queens County. The Senate bill forced Queens County to take five per cent of the capital stock, which, while apparently $100,000, might, by an increase of the stock to be construed to mean $500,000. The Assembly amendment fixes the amount definitely at $100,000 and divides this sum among the several towns of the county, in accordance with their nearness to the bridge and the benefit to be derived from its construction, as follows: Long Island City, $50,000; Newtown, $20,000; Flushing, $12,000; Jamaica, $12,000; Hempstead, $10,000; North Hempstead, $6,000; Oyster Bay, $6,000. This division has been approved by the leading men of Queens County as just and fair; and Senator GREEN is said to have agreed with a delegation of them not to oppose it. This morning, however, the Senate, led by GREEN, refused to concur in the amendments, and Committees of Conference have been appointed, headed by GREEN, in the Senate, and FERRY, in the Assembly. It is significant, and occasions remark, that PRINCE, whose amendments are the subject in controversy, was not put on the Committee; and the present prospect is that there will be a strong fight against the bill in the Assembly if the Senate does not yield as both the Queens County members are determined to fight the matter to the bitter end, and are fully indorsed by their constituents.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following bills were introduced yesterday in the State Senate:

By Mr. FRENCH—Incorporating the People's Mutual Benefit Society; by Mr. CAMPBELL—Providing for the care of insane persons; by Mr. LOGAN—Amending a bill for the better regulation of elections of directors of corporations, and to prevent fraud in the taking of proxies at the same.

In the Assembly, the following bills were introduced:

By Mr. DEMAS—To incorporate the East Brooklyn Savings Bank; by Mr. MOSHER—authorizing the Fulton Bank of Brooklyn to increase its capital; by Mr. GOODSICH—authorizing the improvement of Sixteenth and Sixth streets, Brooklyn.

Reading To-Night.

Mr. F. C. HARRIOTT will read at the Church of the Strangers this evening. Selections from Mr. BRET HARTE's works are named as being part of the programme, and Dr. DEMAS will speak.

The Mysterious Death of Edward Fitzpatrick.

Coroner KEENAN, yesterday, held an inquest in the case of EDWARD FITZPATRICK, late clerk of the banking-house of EUGENE KELLY & Co., who disappeared on Jan. 21 after taking supper with some friends in Thames-street, and whose body was found in the East River at the foot of Eighteenth-street on March 27. From the evidence it was proved that FITZPATRICK had drank heavily on the night of his disappearance, and a verdict was returned of accidental drowning, as there was no evidence to show anything like foul play in the matter.

SAN DOMINGO.

recently made by the Ecclesiastical Court, counting by parishes, which gave a total of 207,000. There are evident signs of error in this estimate, for instance, the capital was set down at 16,000, while it is obvious to the careful observer who counts streets and houses, that there cannot be over six thousand, if so many. Again, Azua is estimated at ten thousand, while an actual count made a few years ago, showed that it contained only 1,700. The present number is apparently still less. Los Llanos is set down at three thousand; but the Military Governor now estimates that the number of families does not exceed 150, which would indicate a population of not over 1,000, although by a tax list of 1867, in the possession of the Commission, it had 979 ratepayers. The communes of San Juan, Las Lagunas, Neyba, &c., are set down at 22,000; but they have been depopulated by revolution and invasion, and their actual number is fixed by local residents and other competent witnesses, at from 5,000 to 8,000. Comparing these figures of the Ecclesiastical Court with certain known facts, and with all the evidence we can gather from intelligent witnesses and our own observation, the Commissioners estimate that the actual population of the Republic does not exceed 150,000. This does not include the many who have voluntarily expatriated themselves on account of the continual disturbances, nor the few who have been banished. It seems probable that of the 150,000 souls, the population, nineteen-twentieths, are native Dominicans. The others are: First, colored immigrants from the United States; secondly, European traders, who do not settle anywhere, but spent at commercial points. Negro blood preponderates very largely in Hayti, but the pure negro, of African type, is not common even there. The white blood preponderates in Dominica; but pure whites, in the popular sense of the word, are not numerous. The majority are of a mixed race, much nearer white than black.

CHARACTER OF THE SOIL.

Summarily and practically viewed, for agricultural purposes, there are five classes of lands in San Domingo, viz: First—The mountain slopes and valleys. These are uniformly rich and productive, except in the limited regions where rain is deficient, as on the southern slope of the coast range, north-east of Monte Christi. Second—The extensive prairie region of the Llanos lying east and north of San Domingo City, south of the Cibao range; this is all admirable pasture land. Large portions of it is capable of profitable cultivation. Third—The rolling plain of the Vega, which is generally wooded, and is the finest body of agricultural ground on the island. Fourth—The Doglands, like a portion of the plain of Azua and the Valley of the Yaqui, where rain is partly or wholly wanting from topographical causes; these lands can be made fertile by artificial irrigation. Fifth—The red-clay lands, mostly along the coasts, underlaid by coralline limestone; these are usually covered with timber; they are not generally very rich or deep, but are susceptible of profitable cultivation. The vicinity of San Domingo City is a fair average specimen of this class of soils.

PROPORTION CAPABLE OF CULTIVATION.

Although San Domingo contains almost every variety of soil, there is very little swampy or sandy land. In this respect it differs widely from Florida and the other Gulf States. The country is varied in surface, unusually well watered, and excels in natural drainage. There is hardly any portion of the island where the land is not capable of cultivation. The mountains support a vegetable growth during from one-half of the low lands, but they do not rise so high as to be covered with snow. Everywhere they are fertile, except the few small districts already mentioned, as the Plain of Yaga, and a part of the Azua region, whose character could be changed by irrigation. Taken as a whole, this Republic is one of the most fertile regions on the face of the earth. The cocoa of Aux Cayes, well acquainted with the other West India Islands, declares this to be naturally the richest of them all.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

While the geographical position of San Domingo, within the tropics, implies the successful cultivation of all the tropical fruits and vegetables, including the commercial staples, the differences of exposure, elevation above the sea and character of soil, present a variation of circumstances adapting particular districts, many different classes of growths and branches of agricultural industry. The prairie lowlands and valleys sugar-cane yields the most profitable returns. The extent and average richness of the tracts suited to this purpose are unsurpassed in the West Indies. The evidence shows that the average quality of soil of San Domingo, especially the plains of Vega and portions of the country on the north shore, are better adapted to raising sugar-cane than are the sugar-growing districts of the adjacent islands. This is corroborated by the observation of the Commissioners. They and their agents inspected several of the principal sugar plantations in Jamaica. The production of these is very great where irrigation is practiced. In fine seasons it is said to exceed two tons per acre. But in many of the circumstances conducive to the most profitable manufacture, Demerara is less favored than San Domingo. A much larger portion of the latter is naturally watered to a degree suitable for this and other agricultural purposes. In many parts of San Domingo the canes do not need replanting for many years. Fifteen successive annual cuttings from the original root are common, and upon the richest lands excellent canes are found of much greater age. This is due partly to the greater frequency and abundance of rain, resulting from the easterly or windward position of San Domingo, which gives it freer access to the trade winds than the islands further within the Gulf, and partly also to the rich vegetable mould which covers the surface of the extreme plains and valleys, the result of centuries of forest growth and decay. The greater abundance of fuel would appear to give San Domingo an additional advantage over adjoining islands in this branch of industry. The mountain regions are especially suited to the culture of coffee and cocoa. The soil of the hills is usually rich. Even where too steep to be plowed, it can be cultivated with the hoe. The salubrity of the climate and the beauty of the scenery makes the hills exceedingly attractive. To persons unacclimated and unaccustomed to the northern temperature, these mountain regions offer peculiar inducements. At present these high lands, which form more than one-half the area of the island, are generally uninhabited and almost unvisited by man. In Jamaica are many plantations of coffee in similar situations at an altitude of 3,500 to 4,000 feet above the level of the sea. The culture of coffee and cocoa requires much less labor and capital than that of sugar and is peculiarly adapted to families of moderate means. The coffee-tree begins to bear at the age of four years and continues to yield an annual crop for more than fifty years. The cocoa is equally productive and easy of culture. Native chocolate prepared from the cocoa bean is of excellent quality and in general use. Both these trees have become thoroughly naturalized, and are found growing wild in the woods, and seem free from disease or noxious insects. There are a number of plants, varieties of the genus agave, which produce valuable fibres, already employed to some extent in San Domingo for domestic purposes. The "cambray" is the most common. It grows wild in the dryest and most sterile districts. It is susceptible of easy cultivation. Dominicans make it into ropes, halters, hammock fastenings, &c. By the rough process of extracting the fibre by hand, now used, it could not be profitably manufactured, but with suitable machinery it would form an important article of export. The product of wax and honey is surprisingly large. In many places the rocks and hollow trees abound in bees. The honey is so cheap and plentiful that comparatively little of it is saved. Thousands of hives are destroyed for the sake of the wax alone. Wax candles are in general use among the poorer classes. Wild ginger and indigo grow everywhere in profusion. The tree-cotton grows even on the dry lands, and bears abundantly. The American cotton shrub is also raised successfully near Azua. Almost every tropical production would seem possible in a soil so rich and a climate so genial. At a still higher point upon these mountains the culture of cinchona, or Peruvian bark, can be made a profitable branch of industry. This invaluable plant requires an equable climate, free from excessive heat and frost. It is successfully been introduced into the neighboring Island of Jamaica, and flourishes at an elevation of from 4,000 to 6,000 feet. The trees only four years old are already six inches in circumference, and they are about eleven feet in height at the age of two years, and they will have attained sufficient size to be cut down and recruit with spring up again from the roots without planting. The British Government seems to have considered this production a matter of national importance, and have carefully fostered it.

* * * * * * *

In the more arid districts goats abound, and in the forests swine thrive in great numbers. Sheep are now very few; poultry is plentiful; flocks of wild guinea fowls may be seen in many parts of the island. For traveling and transportation horses are generally used. They are raised in great numbers; they are smaller at than those common in our own country, but are strong, and docile, of great endurance, and thrive upon a scanty subsistence. The great drawback to stock-raising has arisen from marauding expeditions during various insurrections and revolutions; only the frequency of these has prevented an immense development of this branch of national wealth. One of the most remarkable agricultural features of San Domingo is the diversity of natural growths in different localities. This arises from differences of soil, humidity and temperature. The landscapes of Maine and Louisiana scarcely differ more widely to the eye than the lower portions of the adjoining valleys of the Yuna and the Yaqui, flowing respectively into the Bays of Samana and Manzanillo; between the same ranges of mountains. The palms and plantains of the one bear little resemblance to the cactus and acacias of the other. The high mountain slopes and plateaus of the interior differ equally from both of these, and have a flora of their own. It is safe to predict that when culture and civilization have developed the various capabilities of each, that these contrasts of climate and productions will be still more pronounced. They directly will give rise to extensive internal commerce, and will prove beneficial to the health, comfort and material interests of the inhabitants. The Commissioners expected to find an abundance of these insects and reptile pests which constitute such a drawback to comfort in most tropical countries, but they were agreeably disappointed. Snakes seemed to be about as common as in the interior of our old States, but no venomous ones were heard of. Scorpions and tarantulas are found, but they are not common, and the effects of their bite are seldom serious. The testimony of the head of a thrifty New-England family, who had resided in the neighborhood of Samana Bay nearly two years, was to the effect that there was as little difficulty in keeping a house clear from troublesome insects as in our Northern States.

[The Commissioners then describe the products of the forests, and continue:]

FISHERIES.

The fisheries, once flourishing, have, during these latter years, fallen into neglect. At an earlier period in the history of the island more attention was paid to the marine resources, and the tunny fishery was carried on around all the shores of the island, supplying the home want for salt fish, and allowing an export to the other colonies. This fishery is now discontinued; although great schools of fish are still abundant on the southern shore. The efforts of fishermen are confined to merely supplying the markets of the seaports, and their produce is brought in on two days in the week, although both the surrounding seas and the rivers of the island are well stocked with fishes of many kinds. The black fish, or the grampus, a small member of the whale family, is somewhat abundant on the northern shore, where several score are caught every year, and their blubber tried down for oil. The turtle, both the green edible species and the hawk's bill, whose chief commercial value is in its shell, are abundant in the deep sea a few miles from land, quite around the island. Both are caught in moderate quantities. Several varieties of shell fish are brought into the market in the proper seasons. A small species is very abundant in certain localities, growing attached to the mangrove bushes. They are eaten by the natives, but are not so palatable as the oyster of more northern latitudes.

While an enumeration of the sea and river animals of the island, known to naturalists, would show a large number of kinds of great importance to commerce, little can be told of their distribution or abundance. The prostrate condition of industry is as marked in the neglect of the fisheries as in the decay of agriculture.

CLIMATE AND HEALTH.

The testimony of witnesses, the observations of the Commissioners, the reports of special investigations, show that it is generally a healthy country. Immigrants easily become accustomed to the climate, but on the coast where hot weather prevails, care must be taken. Individuals from the Northern States, now residing on the coast and engaged in cultivating plantations in the interior, say they can labor there with their own hands, and that white men may work there under certain regulations as safely as in the United States. The interior of the island consists chiefly of elevated land. The mountain slopes and valleys overlooked or surrounded by lofty ridges are comparatively cool, and are favorable to northern constitutions. Within a few hours' ride inland farms can be visited, whose temperature, cooled by the neighboring peaks, was bracing, and in the same fields could be seen growing, cabbages and bananas, potatoes and plantains, Indian corn and sugar-cane, &c. In effect labor can be prosecuted by white men in such regions, and general good health maintained. The process of acclimation to strangers coming from so slight a cause as to be scarcely an incommodious. It may be said generally that this process presents no greater obstacle to immigration than does the similar process in several of our new States. The physical configuration of the island is such that a decided difference exists between its eastern and Western ends, in regard to health. In the eastern, or inward portion of the island, occupied by the Dominican Republic, the principal mountain chains run in lines approaching an east and west direction. The valleys between them are, therefore, swept during the great portion of the year by the trade winds, which, in that latitude, come from directions east and north-east. These valleys are thus constantly supplied with pure air from the ocean, and malarious influences are rapidly dissipated. On the other hand, the western end of the island, occupied by Hayti, is walled in on its eastern or leeward side by chains of high mountains, running in irregular curves from north to south. It would appear that these act to some extent as barriers to the trade-winds, and to this fact, coupled with the influence of neighboring marshes and mangrove swamps, it is due in a great measure that Port-au-Prince, and the other country about it, have so bad a reputation in regard to health. As to the large towns, there can be no doubt that the want at present of any practical application of sanitary knowledge causes them to rank far lower in regard to health than they otherwise would. Among the leading historical events connected with the islands of Hayti and San Domingo which have stamped themselves upon the public mind, are the dreadful epidemics, principally yellow fever, which ravaged the English and French and Spanish Armies successively landed upon the coast. The victims were Europeans, and their adult fate interested millions, so that in the public mind, San Domingo and yellow fever became almost synonymous. It is a matter of history that the most fatal of these, that of the French at the beginning of this century, conducted its operations mainly in the Haytian part of the island. The English expedition to San Domingo, which is sometimes referred to, so far as can be ascertained, was not attended by any more unusual loss of life from disease than might have been expected, with the imperfect sanitary regulations of military forces which have existed down to a very recent period. The losses of the Spanish Army from illness were largely due to the utter lack of sanitary care, and the Commissioners are satisfied that those losses have been enormously exaggerated. The Commissioners have given special attention to the matter of health; and besides getting information from other quarters they have charged two medical gentlemen to report speedily upon it, and their reports are appended. Their conclusion is this: The popular idea that the Dominican territory is particularly unhealthy, and that persons visiting it are peculiarly liable to yellow fever, is entirely erroneous. The average general health and longevity is quite equal to and probably greater than that of the United States, as a whole. Immigrants are not liable to any more disturbance of general health in the process of acclimatization, than are persons who pass from the old to the new States of the United States; and saving upon the sea-coast, the process is so simple as to be scarcely worthy of notice. Taking the year through, as much agricultural work can be done without affecting health as can be done in our Middle and Western States, and with greater results. Persons in all circumstances can here, by selecting their locality, enjoy a delicious climate and abundance of fruit with far less liability to diseases of the lungs, to scarlet fevers and other fearful epidemics, and without any liability to yellow fever. The Commission, its attaches and the gentlemen of the Press numbered 92; the officers and crew of the frigate numbered 456. This company of 548 sojourned in the harbors, supposed to be the most unhealthy parts of the country, or in the interior of the island, about twenty days on shore. Few, if any, had been acclimated. Nevertheless there was but one case of mortal disease, and that from causes unconnected with climate. There was no case of malignant fever and none of severe sickness among them. The steamer Nantucket, with its full complement of officers and seamen, had been in the harbors of the island for about fifteen months and has not had a single case of yellow fever.

EARTHQUAKES AND HURRICANES.

In 1842 there was a severe earthquake which did considerable damage in some portions of the island. Several similar shocks had previously occurred in the course of three and one-half centuries. Since that time none has been experienced, which, according to the accounts of the people, did any serious damage to life and property. Almost every year very slight shocks occur, so inconsiderable that scarce one in a dozen of the inhabitants is aware of them. About the time of the autumnal equinox, hurricanes are not unfrequent, and are sometimes attended with damages especially to shipping along the coast, and even to trees and crops on land.

RIVERS.

There are several rivers, as the Yuna, Yaqui and Ozama, which during the greater part of the year can be navigated by vessels of light draught to a considerable distance into the interior. At present they simplify and afford facilities for floating down the timber which grows within easy distance of their banks.

BAYS AND HARBORS.

The territory of the Dominican Republic is indented with numerous harbors, generally accessible only by vessels of light draft. The three great Bays of Samana, Ocon and Manzanilla admit vessels of the largest draft, and are important as outlets of the commerce of the country surrounding them, especially the Bay of Manzanilla, which lies at the entrance of the great valley of the Yaqui, but neither of the two last named has any great importance in a military point of view.

THE BAY OF SAMANA.

The Bay of Samana, however, deserves more careful attention, as, on many accounts, it is the most important in the West Indies. It is on the north-eastern extremity of the island, is thirty miles long by about ten miles broad, and is sufficiently commodious for the largest fleets. It is well protected from the winds, especially those of the north-east, by the mountains of the peninsula. Its entrance presents no obstacle to ships of the largest draught, is narrower than that of the harbor of St. Thomas, but is the more easily fortified on that account. As shown by Gen. McClellan in his report on this bay, very simple fortifications at the entrance of the harbor and at Port Jackson on the north shore would guard it thoroughly. Its situation gives it easy command of the Mona passage, the most important eastern avenue to the Gulf of Mexico, whose importance will be immensely enhanced should any new passage be opened to the world's commerce through the Isthmus of Darien. To any Power having occasion to maintain a fleet in the West Indies, it would be invaluable. To the United States, in case of war, it would be of vast importance to protect its interests in the Gulf of Mexico, the value of the position as a coaling station can hardly be overrated. Under a secure and liberal Government, a city would grow up at some point on this bay which would be one of the great commercial centres of the West Indies. Its value to the coasting trade is enhanced by the fact that what is commonly called the peninsula is, in reality, an island, as there is a passage which could easily be made available for ships of moderate size from the west end of the bay to the north coast. The testimony shows that a few citizens of the United States have acquired the right to a considerable part of the water front of the village of Santa Barbara, which is one of the numerous villages in this extensive bay, and has hereofore attracted the most attention. The portion so acquired forms but a small part of the space which would be needed and occupied by a great commercial city, should it ever should finally grow up at this particular point. The country adjacent to the Bay of Samana is exceedingly attractive, and the neighborhood are not comfortable by the ecologists attached to the expedition, for the richness of the surrounding country in all other respects has never, so far as known, been over estimated. All accounts agree also as to its salubrity. This bay derives an additional importance as the natural outlet of the eastern slope of the great plain called La Vega Real, which is the richest part of the island, and possesses every element of agricultural wealth, and valuable mineral resources. The chief city, Santiago, is, as regards inland trade, the most important in the Republic, and in its neighborhood are several towns of little less importance. The inland communications from the Bay of Samana, would be easy. The Una River could be navigated for a considerable distance by steamers of light draught. And a railroad along that valley would have in its favor the absence of heavy grades and large rivers, and the presence of an unlimited supply along a great part of it of the best timber for ties. The Commissioners were notified while investigating matters at the capital of the Dominican Republic, that although the Government of the United States had not relinquished possession of the Bay of Samana, but had constantly enjoyed the use and occupation thereof as a naval station, the rent due was in default for more than two years.

The sum total of debt and claims is said to be $1,565,831 39¼. The total receipts of the Government are $95,449 55.

OF DOMINICAN INDEPENDENCE.

Their attention having been called to certain declarations regarding the independence of the Dominican Republic, and the attachment of the people there to those points were especially dwelt upon by the Commissioners. As already stated, the question was frequently asked: "In case the independence of the Dominican Republic were possible, would you prefer it to annexation? The general answer was, "We would prefer independence; but independence is impossible." That this latter declaration is the result of a true insight into the condition of the country by those who know it best, that it is the conclusion to which a thoughtful lover of that country can come, is made manifest by the following recapitulation of facts: Historically the Dominican Republic has never maintained any real independence, with the exception of the very brief period after its first separation from Spain, it has never seen a day when its most bitter foe, the Haytian Republic, has not been in defiant possession of a valuable portion of its territory.

There is but one chance for that Republic ever to recover its independence—to become, after a proper period of probation, one of a Union of States—the freedom and substantial independence of each being guaranteed by the strength of all.

CONCLUSION.

In reviewing the whole field of their investigations, looking to the interests of both divisions of the island, the Commissioners are firmly persuaded that the annexation of San Domingo to the United States would be hardly less beneficial to the Haytian, than to the Dominican people. The benefit would arise—first, from the example which would, doubtless, be afforded of a well-regulated, orderly and prosperous State—the great need of that part of the world—and which it has as yet never seen. A second and more direct benefit would arise from the equitable establishment of a boundary line between the French-speaking and the Spanish-speaking nations upon that island, and its guarantee by a strong power. This would end the exhausting border warfare, which has been one of the greatest curses of Hayti as well as of San Domingo, and would enable both to devote their energies thenceforward to the education of their people and the development of their resources. Respectfully submitted.

WOMAN'S WORK.

Working Women's Protective Union Anniversary—Addresses of Mr. Beecher, Dr. Tyng and Others.

Last evening, an anniversary meeting of the Working Women's Protective Union was celebrated at the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, corner Twenty-third-street and Fourth-avenue.

Mr. JAMES W. GERARD pleasantly set before a large and appreciative audience the aims and motives of the Association, as well as its experiences and doings during its seven years and a half of existence, during which time 108,000 women and girls had applied for assistance, and very many of them received aid, not in actual money, but by being provided with work, which was paid for—miserably, it was true, but paid. They wanted $50,000 in order that this good thing might go on, and he proposed that the Legislature be applied to for $25,000, and they would get the balance.

Rev. H. TYNG said a few words in support of Mr. GERARD's remarks, but thought that the community, not the Legislature, should meet the emergency.

Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER said: That although he had just been alluded to as a prophet, he confessed that he had not made much of a prophecy that had not come to pass; only of things that had. In reference to the Working Women's Protective Union, he considered that next to its refusal, the worst thing was charity, for it ruined as many as it cured by taking away self-reliance. In general, charitable help should be given through the family institutions; that the best thing was to give courage, and teach the poor to make the best use of what they had. The woman who had the power to manage wisely, and knew how to impart the knowledge, if she did not give away one single dollar might yet do incalculable good. But in great cities household charities could not do enough, and this institution, he took it, supplemented the family one, and took care of the vast number who needed help. The generous sympathies of mankind took care of prosperous women, but the homeless, how did they fare when thrown on the generosity of the community? We liked the angelic, but then there was the element of humanity. He spoke in commendatory terms of the Courts which had taken such an interest in the measure. There were hundreds of poor women, out of sewing-girls; beat them out of a week's work, and robbed them of their deposit money besides, on the plea that they had spoiled their work. These miscreants enjoyed their villainies as much as the spider relished the blood of its victim. That institution compelled these men to discharge. The Legislature had done a good thing in allowing certain protection to women. He was at war with brother TYNG, and thought they should go to Albany for $25,000, not because the community would not furnish what was necessary, but because it would keep $25,000 from mischief. He took cheer from that auspicious night when he saw so goodly an attendance. Might God befriend the poor and bless those who befriend them. He closed with the Savior's words, "Inasmuch as ye do it unto the least of these my brethren, ye do it unto me."

The Reform Meeting To-Night.

The attendance at the meeting in Cooper Institute this evening is expected to be very large and earnest in its denunciation of the frauds attempted by the Ring. The speech of the evening will be delivered by Hon. WM. M. EVARTS, who, in the course of his remarks, will present some facts which will startle the community. The gentlemen who are in charge of this movement for political reform are determined to carry out their views, and present them in such a shape as will command the attention of every one who has the interests of the City and State at heart. They do not propose to establish any new party, but to perfect an organization of men of both parties, for the sole purpose of effecting reform, and exposing and uprooting the corruption which now exists. This meeting will be the first of a series which are to be held for the purpose of awakening the people to a sense of their danger, and providing a remedy. It should be well attended, and in every respect worthy to be called a mass-meeting.

Methodist New-York East Conference.

The New-York East Conference met at the M. E. Church, Stamford, Conn., on Wednesday morning. About 200 ministers were present. Bishop SCOTT presided. Measures were instituted to erect a monument over the grave of Bishop KINSLEY, who died last year, in Syria. The project of establishing a Methodist Seminary at Stamford will occupy the attention of the Conference.

Rev. FRIEND W. SMITH, of Easton, Conn., a venerable divine of fifty years' standing, and who was to have delivered an address before the Convention yesterday afternoon, died suddenly while at the breakfast-table, on Tuesday morning. Very interesting and feeling allusions were made to the event during the afternoon sessions. Rev. Dr. CURRIER, of the Christian Advocate & Journal, delivered an address in place of the deceased.

Disaster at Sea.

The iron sailing vessel Hudson, which left this port for New-Orleans on Friday last, was found, on Tuesday last, almost a wreck by the steamer Ashland, off Chincoteague Bay. Two of the masts of the Hudson were gone, and she was drifting about in a helpless condition when found by the Ashland.

BULLOFF DOOMED.

The Final Act of Justice—His Confession of the Crime.

The Removal from Binghamton to Elmira—Startling Incidents on the Journey and in the Court-Room—Sentence: To be Hanged May 18.

From Our Special Correspondent.

ELMIRA, Wednesday, April 5, 1871.

Accompanied by the strongest proofs of universal detestation in which he is held, EDWARD H. BULLOFF today made his last earthly journey, except that one of a hundred steps from his cell to the gallows, which he is now irrevocably doomed to undertake. Having baffled the law during thirty years of willful crime, and having exhausted every technicality to avoid the punishment due his last dreadful deed, he was by the action today of the Supreme Court at Elmira, deprived of his last expedient; and now he stands face to face with a doom no power on earth except Executive interference can put from him.

BULLOFF'S EFFORTS TO ESCAPE THE GALLOWS.

It is not necessary to recall the facts of the murder of FREDERICK A. MISRICK, of which BULLOFF stands convicted, as the TIMES published full and accurate details at the time of the trial at Binghamton in January last. A brief review, however, of the subsequent legal proceedings is necessary to rfull understanding of the events of the day. After the conviction, the prisoner was sentenced by Judge HOGEBOOM to be hanged on the 24th March. But on the 28th of January Judge HOGEBOOM granted a writ of error, and the case went to the Supreme Court, General Term, of the Third Department, then sitting at Albany, where it was heard at the February term, and the judgment below affirmed. BULLOFF, by his counsel, then applied to Judge RAPALLO, of the Court of Appeals, at his residence in New-York City, who, upon the 28th of February, granted a writ of error to the Court of Appeals, with a stay of proceedings, which made the sentence of Judge HOGEBOOM inoperative as to the day named. The case was fully argued before the Court of Appeals on the 15th ult., and a few days afterward that tribunal unanimously affirmed the judgment. The day for the execution being then passed the Court of Appeals also remanded the prisoner to the Supreme Court General Term, for the naming of another day of execution. The record of these facts being certified to, Hon. THEODORE MILLER, Presiding Judge of the Third Department, issued a writ of habeas corpus to Sheriff MARTIN, requiring the prisoner to be produced before the Court at Elmira, today. It will now be understood how BULLOFF, who has gone through all the Appellate Courts in far less time than any murderer ever did before, came legally today, and for the last time, before a tribunal, and it remains to be told next how he got there physically, and what befel him when there.

BULLOFF IN PUBLIC—APPEARANCE.

In the gray dawn of this morning which was bitter cold for the season, BULLOFF emerged for the first time since January from the solitude of his Binghampton prison to encounter the gaze of curious thousands. Chained to Policeman DURROW, and having as a guard Sheriff MARTIN Chief of Police FLYNN, and several subordinate officers, he walked to the Binghamton depot. Early as it was, an immense crowd pressed roughly about him for even a glimpse of his face. If the moments thus spent in waiting for the cars were moments of agony, he showed no sign of it in his expression or demeanor. Hemmed in by the surging crowd made for the movement by morbid curiosity as callous as himself, he gave it stare for stare with perfect indifference. His was in perfect physical condition as he stood before them, and many remarked that he looked even better than when upon his trial. His clothes were the same he then wore and were a little more worn than then, and the dye had gone out of his hair and whiskers, leaving the first a dusty brown and the other a faded blue, mixed with gray. This fact made his face more unpleasant than ever, and when he smiled, as he often did during this ghastly day, his laugh seemed more than ever before like that of a hyena, and I have never seen this man's features relax in a smile without being reminded of a singularly morose beast of that species I once saw stirred up in a menagerie.

Presenting this appearance, and preserving throughout that perfectly unmoved demeanor that with him is the callousness of depravity, he started from Binghamton at 6½ A. M., in a special car furnished Sheriff MARTIN. At every town on the way—for the train was a local one, stopping everywhere—without the slightest provocation, the prisoner was met by the same morbid curiosity which he had encountered at the start. At Owego and Waverley the crowds were unusually large, and being fierce in proportion to size, swarmed around, upon, and, in spite of guarded doors, into the car to gaze upon a man who as they would upon a wild beast of some hitherto unknown species. By the time his journey commenced BULLOFF had tired of being a show for the multitude, for as soon as he took his seat he drew down the blind of the car-window beside him, and always did so when the train stopped at a station. At other times the blind was up, and he gazed steadfastly at the country through which he was passing.

AT ELMIRA.

At Elmira he was pounced upon by a most eager multitude, that made the journey from the depot to the Court-house one of great difficulty and no little hazard, as the prisoner and his escort were in danger of being trampled down by the general eagerness to catch a glimpse of the criminal's face. But the crowd was roughly offended by BULLOFF's left with little ceremony and less softness, the short distance was soon passed and the Court-house gained. The vast chamber was already crammed without and within the bar, so that great confusion and delay was encountered in getting the prisoner before the Court, composed of Hon. THEODORE MILLER, Presiding Justice, and Hon. PLATT POTTER and Hon. JOHN M. PARKER, Associate Justices, all of whom were already in their places. Silence being at length restored, Attorney-General CHAMPLAIN rose and said that EDWARD H. BULLOFF being before the Court, he was present to argue any matters of law which might possibly be urged in his behalf, but, understanding the prisoner to be present without counsel, he would resign the case into the hands of the District-Attorney of Broome County, Mr. HOPKINS then rose, and having briefly recited the various legal steps by which the prisoner had reached the Court, moved that the sentence of the law be pronounced upon him.

BULLOFF'S LAST APPEAL.

Judge MILLER then addressing the prisoner in the usual form as to whether he had anything to say why sentence of death should not be passed upon him, BULLOFF stood and answered in the affirmative. It was evident with his first word that this man had nerves which could be shaken. While he could maintain complete mastery of the play of his features; he could not control his voice, which was so low and tremulous that he was not understood a dozen feet away. He was fully aware of his condition, for, begging pardon for his trepidation as not unnatural under the circumstances, he stepped up to the seat of the Judges and thenceforward spoke more coherently, but in a low conversational tone. Almost pathetically saying that every man's hand had been against him, and every circumstance of the case twisted against him, he went on to lay bare his last hope by referring to the fact that, as he claims, new evidence has been discovered since his trial. This evidence, however, he immediately showed had always been in his possession, for he said he had told his counsel exactly where two pistols might be found in the Chenango River, which, being found and put in evidence, would acquit him of having fired the shot which killed MISRICK. He then declared that one of these pistols had been found, and had been in possession of the prosecutor, but had not been brought forward, and he claimed that such being the case, it was imperative upon the Court to make fresh inquiry into the facts. When he had concluded his rambling, hesitating, and somewhat incoherent harangue with a motion to that effect, he added that in case the Court should decide that they had a purely ministerial duty to perform, he had something further to say which he had reduced to the form of an affidavit. When he sat down Mr. HOPKINS rose and said that after what had been stated he wished to declare, in the most public manner, that the prosecution had never had any such pistol as referred to by the prisoner, and had heard of the existence of such since the trial.

A silence then came for a moment, after which the Court, speaking through Mr. Justice MILLER, said they had nothing to do with any question of fact, and could not entertain any motion regarding any of the facts. The case in its judicial progress had got beyond the point where any review of any of the proceedings was possible in any Court, and all such matters are now for Executive consideration alone.

THE MURDERER'S CONFESSION.

BULLOFF then stepped forward beside to the desk of the Judges, and in a low but somewhat more steady voice, read an affidavit, which in its material parts, and so far as it purports to give the facts of the murder, is as follows:

"When MISRICK & BURROWS awoke JARVIS was in the rear building with the first parcel of goods, and there were only two of the men in the store. * * MISRICK had just turned over in bed, and was, perhaps, sleeping lightly, when the person in the rear building stepped unceasingly upon a loose board, or tumbled against it, which awoke him. He and BURROWS both sprang up and made similar noises expressive of fright. They were told to keep still, and in that respect did so. BURROWS immediately attacked one of the men. MISRICK turned for his pistol and snapped it in the face of the other. The man then advanced upon MISRICK with a pistol, but told him to keep still, and he would not be hurt. MISRICK grabbed for the mask upon the face of this man and tore it off. He was again told to keep still and he would not be hurt, but he was so evidently preparing to disregard this, that the man, not wishing to kill him, fired a shot, and he fell dead at his feet. At the foot he met JARVIS, and told him briefly what had occurred, and it was concluded to wait a moment and see what would be done with DEXTER. DEXTER had taken no notice of or indifference whether he was arrested or not, and had MISRICK and BURROWS proceeded only to secure his person, there would have been no thought of interfering with or molesting them in so doing. But they proceeded at once in the most unequivocal manner to kill. The noise of the conflict was distinctly heard. BURROWS was heard to say, 'Let's make short work of him.' MISRICK was seen twice to raise the stool-top and to throw it down. DEXTER was heard to groan, and twice to call for help. At this point the two men returned quietly up the stairs, to where the conflict then was. One of them drew aside a cloth, which had concealed the view, and saw DEXTER prostrate, his face covered with blood, and BURROWS holding him down, with his hands in a similar condition. Himself entirely unseen, this person could then easily have killed either MISRICK or BURROWS, or both of them, if he had any desire so to do, but he had not. To alarm them he fired about the middle of the bannister. This must remain unknown to the state to see what the effect of the firing would be. JARVIS had passed up behind him. JARVIS and MISRICK clinched at the head of the stairs, and moved a eastward nearly across the store. BURROWS and DEXTER remained together, and moved a short distance. BURROWS here threw DAVENPORT again, and the third man came up stairs as he was bending over him. As he approached, BURROWS straightened up, MISRICK was told to go down stairs, and did so, while BURROWS remained standing where he then was throughout the remainder of the affair.

When DEXTER had seen the third man went over to where MISRICK and JARVIS then were, and found JARVIS caught JARVIS by a certain part of the body and appeared to be hurting him severely. Both were standing up, and remained so; their backs were partially towards each other. JARVIS relaxing around and bending his body as if to break the hold, and with his left hand at or near MISRICK's neck was pushing him away. By placing one hand on the bannister and the other on the floor he contrived to force them apart. JARVIS finally spoke to MISRICK and said twice, "Stop that, or I'll shoot you," and soon after he was shot. JARVIS fired the shot that killed him. BULLOFF did not.

THE SENTENCE.

The condemned having finished reading this confession of his presence at the scene of the crime, and denial of the palpable fact that he fired the fatal shot, stepped back a few paces and stood within the bar for his doom. Justice MILLER began by saying there was nothing in all the prisoner had said, nor in all that he had written to interfere with the discharge of the solemn duty resting upon the Court. He warned the prisoner not to trust in the hope of pardon, reprieve, or commutation, as he would find it groundless, and exhorted him to employ the brief remnant of his time on earth in preparing to meet his God. The sentence was then pronounced.

That the prisoner be remanded to the Binghamton Jail, there to remain in close confinement until the 18th day of May next, and on that day between the hours of 10 o'clock in the forenoon and 2 o'clock in the afternoon, within the said jail or the yard adjacent thereto, he should be hanged by the neck until he should be dead.

BULLOFF heard these dread words without the quivering of a muscle, and sat down almost with an expression of satisfaction upon his repulsive face.

BACK TO BINGHAMTON.

Immediately after the sentence he was taken to the Elmira Jail, and soon afterward to the depot, followed everywhere by the curious rabble. On the way back to Binghamton the scenes of the morning were repeated, but he was even more indifferent than before to the morbid crowds. He talked freely during the journey, and made some interesting additions to the confession he had made in Court. He said that it was JARVIS and DEXTER who robbed the store of HALBERT BROTHERS in the May previous to the murder, and that he saw these companions of his infamous years drowned in the Chenango River, and it will be remembered that when confronted with their bodies he declared solemnly that he had never seen either of them before. There are many mysteries connected with his life about which he has not yet spoken; but it is believed that from this time forth he will babble unceasingly, and, it may be, to some little extent, truthfully.

EFFORTS TO INFLUENCE THE GOVERNOR.

BULLOFF is to make an effort now for commutation of sentence, and it is believed that he is seeking favor in quarters for which he has hitherto had only hatred and contempt. There is a decided belief among those best informed that all applications to Gov. HOFFMAN will prove fruitless, for beside the remarks of Judge MILLER, it was noted that after the sentence Judge POTTER called up Sheriff MARTIN, and privately cautioned him to be very careful in guarding the prisoner, as there was no hope for him, and that all possible precautions must be taken to prevent him from committing suicide. Those who know him best believe BULLOFF to be great as a coward as a villain, and that he will do all in his power to guard against the possibility, he will not hereafter be left alone a single moment; waking or sleeping, henceforth, the sleepless law will be beside him to remind him that he last the day of reckoning for years of warfare on society, swiftly and surely approaches, and the score must at last be paid to the full, so far as his forfeited life can make recompense for the crimes he has committed.

FRIDAY TO BE NO LONGER "HANGMAN'S DAY."

One more singularity of this remarkable case must be noted. Nothing was said in the sentence about the day of the week, but the Judge prefixed to the sentence that the 18th of May is Thursday, and they purposely avoided the canonical "Hangman's Day." E. C.

Dangers and Duties of the Party.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The good news from Connecticut must not make us too sanguine or too careless. There is much yet to do, positively and negatively.

Last week I began a letter to the TIMES. When it was nearly finished I determined to wait till after the Connecticut election. Meanwhile appeared your leader of Saturday, (the 1st,) and anticipated a good deal of what I had to say, even to the very words in one sentence. Nevertheless, I have resolved to send you what I then wrote, even at the risk of seeming to have copied from or repeated your article, for the counsel is good enough to bear repetition.

Had the leaders of the Republican Party only possessed ordinary prudence and common sense, they might have wiped the Democratic Party out of existence, despite all its organization, within a year from the close of the war. Instead of which they played such a series of fantastic tricks, that, had the Democrats on their side only possessed a little decency and honesty—had they, for instance, repudiated repudiation and indorsed revenue reform, instead of doing just the reverse, at their Presidential Convention—they would already have deprived the Republicans of power. GRANT's election they could, indeed, hardly have prevented, but they might have gained, by this time, a majority in the House and most of the State Legislatures. In short, for several years, one of our great parties has owed existence, and the other power, to the blunders of its opponents.

Now, the blunders of political opponents may be very good stock in trade as far as they go, but there is this to be remembered about them, that they always tell more against the Administration than against the Opposition. In the latter not being in power, its blunders are things of the past; time has thrown a veil over them to some extent, while the errors of the party in power are always fresh and exposed to daily criticism.

The weakness of the other anchor on which so many of our Republicans seem content to rest has been so often exposed that it is not necessary to say much about it. The past services of a party, however great, recede more and more into the past as time advances, till depending on them is something like a man's depending on the merits of his ancestors.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

Business at the Exchange was active yesterday, (April 5,) and the attendance large, while a greater degree of interest was manifested in the transactions than in those of the day previous, the bidding being quicker and more spirited. As an unusual circumstance, and worthy of remark, it may be stated that all the pieces of property offered by the various auctioneers engaged in sales, were disposed of, and at no stand was there any under bidding, a fact exceedingly gratifying to those having the true interests of real estate at heart. The results of the day's work was a good one.

The auction attracting the greatest crowd of buyers, and not unnaturally, was that conducted by MULLER, WILKINS & CO., the continuation sale of Central Park lots belonging to the estate of GOUVERNEUR MORRIS WILKINS, deceased, at which the sixty-six lots remaining unsold on Tuesday were disposed of. The prices realized for the eighty lots offered were better than those of the day before, although the general average was not so large. The sixty-six lots brought in the aggregate $239,225, the average per lot being nearly $3,475. Of these lots, however, twenty-seven are situated as high up-town as One Hundred and Twenty-fourth-street, for which, of course, lower figures were expected. The best lots offered yesterday were those embraced in the block bounded by Eighth avenue, (Central Park,) One Hundred and Tenth-street, Morningside-avenue and One Hundred and Ninth-street, sixty in all, and they sold together for $141,600; average, $2,360 each. The block immediately adjoining, on the southern boundary being One Hundred and Eighth-street, all the others the same, comprising twenty-nine lots, brought only $99,325; average about $3,425. The location of the lots in the upper block, it must be admitted, present some superior advantages. Particularly in connection with the proposed Reservoir in Manhattan Park, but these advantages are more than compensated for in the advanced prices, and the figures may, therefore, be termed better than those of Tuesday. The list of lots sold, with full details as to prices, purchasers, &c., will be found, as usual, appended. The sale of the valuable estate is now concluded, and it will be regarded as the most important event in the history of New-York real estate; for, never before, since the creation of Central Park, and the consequent rise of property in the vicinity, has a sale of City lots so extensive been projected, or one more worthy the consideration of investors and the public. Conducted with skill and fairness, both of the late auctioneers in connection with the Wilkins property, have met with well merited success, while the results achieved have not only exceeded the expectations of the owners of the realty, but in their reflex influence upon the market in determining values and establishing confidence, cannot fail to exert a good effect. The following is in brief a recapitulation of the two sales: March 23, 102 lots sold; amount realized, $766,175; average, per lot, $7,513. April 4 and 5, 236 lots sold; total realized, $1,321,650; average, nearly $4,076 per lot. Grand aggregate both auctions, 338 lots sold; amount realized, $2,121,850; grand average per lot, about $6,115.

The next most important sale of yesterday was one conducted by E. H. LUDLOW & CO., MORRIS WILKINS, auctioneer, at which, although an entirely different class of property from that above referred to was offered, public attention was attracted thereto and general interest excited. The auction was held by order of the executors of JOHN MCINTOSH, deceased, and the sale embraced the disposition of a large lot of tenement property, fee and leasehold, situated on West Sixteenth-street, between Seventh and Eighth avenues. The total sum realized was $69,100, and the prices, although in some instances considered low, were nearly up to the estimated value prior to the transaction. The buildings for the most part are not in first-class order, nor is the neighborhood particularly desirable, still the figures of the sale were only about fair. All the property was sold to terms, which payments, for particulars reference is made to the summary annexed, where, in addition to other facts stated, the rentals of buildings, when made public by the auctioneer, are in each case given. The sale appeared to give satisfaction both to purchasers and to those interested in the estate.

The sales made by other auctioneers were as follows:

By A. J. BLECKER, SON & CO., at public auction, two lots on the north-east corner of Fifth-avenue and One Hundred and Eighteenth-street, and two lots in the rear, on One Hundred and Eighteenth-street, sold in the aggregate for $17,825, a price seemingly low, were it not for the fact that a heavy expense is entailed upon the buyer to remove the rock upon the premises. Details in summary.

By ROBERT A. MCGUIRE, by order of the Supreme Court in foreclosure, under the direction of D. P. INGRAHAM, Jr., Esq., referee. Premises No. 121 Lexington-avenue, east side, between Twenty-eighth and Twenty-ninth streets, sold for $20,550, including amount of mortgage foreclosed, $16,000, to JOHN SCOTT.

By JAMES R. MILLER, by order of the executors of J. R. PERSON, deceased, a small lot, with the improvements thereon, on the north-west corner of Thomas and Church streets, sold for $10,000 to HARRIMAN & WALLACE; also, at another executor's sale, a small lot, known as No. 106 Cliff-street, south-east corner of Hague-street, sold to PATRICK MCRIBB for $6,800.

By WM. KENNELLY, the last sale of the day, a house and lot on the south side of East One Hundred and Twenty-eighth-street, between Third and Fourth avenues, sold to J. D. LEWIN for $7,150. Full particulars of all these transactions will be found below.

In Brooklyn, yesterday, at the Commercial Exchange, No. 280 Fulton-street, quite a large number of sales of property in that city were effected, under the auspices of J. COXE, auctioneer, Mr. COLE being ill, did the office of auctioneer, however, his assistant, Mr. GRAHAM acting for him. The attendance was rather small, the bidding inactive, and business dragged. The lots on Park-avenue and Floyd-street, advertised to be sold, were withdrawn. A list of the property disposed of will be found annexed, as in the case of New-York sales; such transactions as we believe to have been doubtful as to a transfer of title being marked nominal.

For today, at the Exchange in this City, a number of sales are advertised, at which some very valuable and desirable property will be offered. MULLER, WILKINS & CO., in addition to an extensive list of improved residence sales, will sell a large number of building lots—a partition sale—while E. H. LUDLOW & CO. will offer property located both in this City and Brooklyn.

WASHINGTON.

Beginning of the End of the Ku-Klux Legislation.

Mr. Sherman's Resolution Adopted in the Senate—Further Debate in the House—Gen. Schenck's Salary—Protest of Mr. Grinnell.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—The Sherman resolution came before the Senate soon after 12 o'clock. Mr. CASSERLY, who is not happy when the end of a debate approaches, asked to have the time of taking the vote extended half an hour, because Mr. POOL was intending to speak till 2 o'clock. This reason seemed so excellent that the request was granted by unanimous consent. Mr. POOL then took the floor in reply to the wholesale aspersions of BLAIR on the State Government of North Carolina, and the men in the public service of that State. It no doubt required a great deal of self-control to let BLAIR's slanders go unanswered, but still it seemed far more than the necessity of the case demanded to spend nearly three hours in disproving his falsehoods in detail, since a contradiction in general terms from almost any source would be quite sufficient to offset them. At 4 o'clock Mr. POOL closed, and Mr. THURMAN offered a substitute for the resolution, which he said would, if agreed to, receive the unanimous vote of the Senate. Mr. SHERMAN was permitted to modify by changing the word proven to proved to suit the taste of Mr. SUMNER. Mr. SUMNER is above the grammars and dictionaries, and can coin "gradualism," "ridiculosity," &c., but before English law he bows, at least in its authority for words. The Democrats tried in vain for an amendment, which should raise the sin of the resolution over the heads of the Kuklux, but the Republicans deemed their help, both in forming the resolution and passing it, and it was carried by a party vote as first proposed, except a clause was added calling for a speedy report by the Committee. The concurrent resolution for the appointment of an Investigating Committee, with the amendment of the House, was taken up after some opposition and an attempt was made to vote on it without further debate. The Democrats seemed inclined to agree to this but a motion for an Executive Session prevailed, and it will serve as a pretext for more Kuklux speeches as is expected.

GEN. SCHENCK'S SALARY.

Mr. PATTERSON today reported from the Senate Foreign Relations Committee a bill to enable Gen. SCHENCK to draw his salary as Minister to England, which, under existing law, he cannot do, while he remains in this country. There would be no objection to this proposition on its merits, but the Anthony resolution was in the way and EDMUNDS had just objected to some other propositions. On the same ground he objected to this, and remarked that the Senator from Rhode Island, ANTHONY, had given notice yesterday of his intention to object to everything not embraced in the resolution. PATTERSON said he had seen ANTHONY, and he had agreed not to object to this. At this point ANTHONY himself came in, and EDMUNDS withdrew his objection and turned the responsibility over to him. ANTHONY adhered to his promise to PATTERSON, but Mr. TIPTON raised his voice to a pitch that might astonish NILSSON herself, in irrevocable objection, and so Minister SCHENCK will have to live a while longer on faith in the justice of Congress at some future time.

THE KUKLUX BILL IN THE HOUSE.

It was finally and positively decided in the House today that the vote on the Southern Outrage bill shall be taken on Friday, and that the previous question shall be called to-morrow just before adjournment. The speeches today were all under the ten-minute rule, except that of Mr. DAWES, who spoke very ably for an hour at the opening of debate, coming up fully to the support of the modified bill as submitted today.

MR. GRINNELL'S PROTEST.

Hon. MOSES H. GRINNELL has written a letter to the President, protesting against his removal from the Naval Office. Naturally enough, a copy of the letter turns up in the hands of a certain gentleman inimical to the President. The substance of the complaint is that having given $5,000 toward the purchase of a house for Gen. GRANT, and $1,000 to the Connecticut election last week, he ought not to have been turned out. Perhaps some people who have been making subscriptions as an appeal to Executive favor may learn from this that it is not always a sure passport.

FORTY-SECOND CONGRESS.

FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.—WASHINGTON, Wednesday, April 5.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New-Hampshire, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported and asked present consideration of a bill to pay to Hon. R. C. SCHENCK, Minister to Great Britain, his salary from the date of his appointment, but no additional compensation to be paid him for serving as a member of the Joint High Commission. Unanimous consent being necessary for the passage of the bill, Mr. TIPTON, of Nebraska, objected, and the bill went over.

SUPPRESSION OF THE KUKLUX.

The regular order, Mr. SHERMAN's resolution for Kuklux legislation, was proceeded with.

Mr. POOL, of North Carolina, declared that while Senators on the Democratic side might have had no intention of protecting murderers, assassins or criminals of any sort, the tendency of their speeches was to encourage and embolden the Kuklux, who would be led into the error of believing they had friends on the Senate floor.

Mr. BAYARD, of Delaware, here interrupted to say he dodged the Senator (POOL) and his colleagues to lay a finger upon one word of a speech or report that would justify that Senator's charge. No language more positive, indignant and unmistakable could be uttered in denunciation of the wrongs complained of than had been used by himself and his Democratic associates. If any encouragement for these outrages was to be found in Congress, it was in the unfounded allegations of the Senator and those who acted with him.

Mr. CASSERLY, of California, responded that so far as he knew, the Democrats of the Senate were unanimously in favor of the investigation into the Southern outrages proposed by the House.

Mr. POOL denied having made any charge; he simply uttered an opinion, as he had a right to do. He now reiterated it, and did not intend to be driven from it by any manifestation of feeling or words of any Senator.

Mr. POOL occupied the floor until 2 o'clock, when the Vice-President stated that, in accordance with a previous arrangement, the next half hour would be appropriated to the minority exclusively.

Mr. THURMAN said the resolution was objectionable in so far as it asserted a condition of things in the South which did not exist, and denied to the Judiciary Committee any discretion as to the authority of the Government to interpose. His Democratic associates and himself were in favor of using all constitutional means to repress Kuklux outrages, and if the objectionable features of the resolution were modified they would all vote for it.

Mr. CASSERLY, of California, expressed his amazement at the sweeping and unjustifiable language of the resolution. While he would go as far as any one to put down Kuklux or any other unlawful combination of men, he hoped that for the honor of the whole country these unwarranted accusations against the good name of the Old North State would not be tolerated.

Mr. STOCKTON, of New-Jersey, said he would always be found ready to join hands with the other side in maintaining the peace of the country. He now asked the Republican Senators why they persisted in refusing to modify the inaccuracies of the resolution, unless their sole object was to prevent Democrats from voting for it? He only asked that the resolution be corrected as to statements of facts, so as to allow him to vote for it.

The following amendment proposed by Mr. THURMAN as a substitute for the resolution, was then rejected by a party vote of yeas 12, nays 38, the Democrats voting for it:

That the Committee on the Judiciary is hereby instructed to inquire what are the constitutional powers of the Federal Government to prevent, suppress, or punish acts of violence or combinations of individuals to perpetrate such acts, committed within a State, and to report by bill, or otherwise.

Mr. STOCKTON, of New-Jersey, moved to modify the resolution by striking out the preliminary part, and leaving simply an instruction to the Judiciary Committee to report a bill, or bills, that will enable the President and Courts of the United States to execute the laws, punish and prevent organized violence, and secure to all citizens the rights guaranteed to them by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS moved to insert after the word "rights" the words "of life, liberty and equal protection of laws." Agreed to.

A roll-call was then taken upon Mr. STOCKTON's amendment as amended. Rejected by yeas 19 to nays 43.

The following Republicans voted in the affirmative: Caldwell, Edmunds and Ferry of Michigan; Hitchcock and Morrill of Vermont, Schurz, Patten and Trumbull. The pending resolution was then amended to direct the Judiciary Committee to report a bill as early as practicable, and adopted by a party vote—yeas 38, nays 12.

THE CASE OF VERGER.

Mr. BLAIR, of Missouri, offered a resolution requesting the Attorney-General to communicate to the Senate, the stipulation or agreement entered into by the Attorney-General of the United States on the part of the Government of the United States, with the counsel of VERGER, charged with the murder of CRAWFORD, in the cause brought before the Supreme Court of the United States, on appeal from the Circuit Court for the State of Mississippi, in regard to the disposition to be made of said cause, in the event of the Supreme Court of the United States taking jurisdiction of the said cause. Laid over for the present.

THE JOINT INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE.

Mr. ANTHONY, of Rhode Island, then moved to take up the concurrent resolution for a joint Committee of Investigation upon the South.

Mr. THURMAN said that as the Senate had determined to precede the investigation by legislation on the subject, his inference was that this investigation was intended solely for Republican electioneering purposes. He was therefore ready to vote against the resolution.

The Senate then held a brief Executive Session.

REPORT OF SAN DOMINGO.

At 4½ o'clock the doors were reopened and a Message was received from the President of the United States, transmitting the report of the San Domingo Commissioners. The Message was read by the Clerk, and upon its conclusion Mr. HARLAN, of Iowa, moved to lay it on the table and to print it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, thought it but fair that something should be said at this time in behalf of those who did not concur in the annexation policy. He desired to present a fair, and temperate statement, to show that the disadvantages of annexation far outweigh its advantages, and asked for unanimous consent to address the Senate on the subject to-morrow.

Mr. STEWART, of Nevada, objected; he didn't want another fruitless San Domingo discussion to the delay of business.

Mr. MORRILL said he desired that the statement of facts he proposed to submit should accompany the report of the San Domingo Commissioners. During further discussion,

Mr. SUMNER remarked that a motion to print a document communicated to the Senate was always in order and always debatable, and the Senate could not now put off debate without stultifying itself and flying in the face of its recorded history. He hoped the Senate would see the question simply in the light of its journal and its acknowledged rule, and allow the Senator from Vermont to have an opportunity to speak upon a subject to which he had given much thoughtful study. The report, which might be found to a certain extent one-sided, ought not to go before the country without the Senator from Vermont having an opportunity to state the other side of the case. This might take time, but why had Senators taken an oath to discharge their duty?

Mr. MORRILL here remarked that if anybody expected any attack from him upon the President of the United States, they would be very much mistaken. He sought the occasion for no such purpose, but from a clear sense of duty, in relation to the Dominican question.

Mr. HARLAN modified his motion by omitting the part relative to printing.

Mr. SUMNER—Then I move the Message be printed.

Mr. STEWART said he would withdraw his objection if it was understood that Mr. MORRILL's speech would be the only one made.

After considerable discussion, mainly of an informal character, the Vice-President stated that after taking the sense of the Senate on the motion to lay on the table, he would submit the question, Will the Senate consider the President's Message at this session? If this was determined negatively, then the motion to print would not be entertained except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HARLAN's motion to lay the Message on the table was then agreed to.

The question indicated by the Chair was then submitted, and, on motion of Mr. CHANDLER, was also tabled by 27 yeas to 18 nays.

Mr. HARLAN asked that, by unanimous consent, the printing of the Message be ordered, and leave given to Mr. MORRILL to speak on Friday morning.

Mr. STEWART—I consent upon the condition that that ends the debate.

Mr. CHANDLER, of Michigan, moved to adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, renewed the request of his colleague for leave to speak.

Mr. CHANDLER insisted upon a vote on the motion. Not agreed to—20 to 26.

Mr. CONKLING, of New-York, desired the understanding to be explicit that the leave asked for by Mr. MORRILL, to speak at length, would be confined exclusively to that Senator.

Mr. THURMAN, of Illinois, expressed his mortification and surprise that the Senate should either hesitate to hear the Senator from Vermont or to print the Message. Both were matters of courtesy and uniformly allowed.

It was finally agreed by unanimous consent to print the Message; that Mr. MORRILL have leave to address the Senate on the question on Friday morning, and that no other speech shall be made.

At 5¼ o'clock the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The Speaker laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State inclosing the draft of a bill which authorizes the accounting officer of the Treasury to pay to Gen. SCHENCK the compensation as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary up to the time when he shall reach his post, notwithstanding his detention in the United States to serve as a member of the Joint Commission, but no pay as such Commissioner. No action was taken on the bill except to have it printed.

THE ENFORCEMENT BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill to enforce the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. DAWES, of Massachusetts, said he recognized in the bill faults which those who had a right to claim its authorship as well as himself were willing to improve by amendment, but he would give his support to the principles on which the bill was founded.

Mr. SHELLABARGER offered an amendment to the bill in place of the second, third and fourth sections, which was ordered to be printed. He explained the effect of the amendment, which was based on that proposed by Mr. COOK. The declaration of martial law is excluded; the privileges of the writ of habeas corpus are not to be suspended unless the Government shall so require as an aid in putting down violence.

The debate was now conducted under the rule that gives ten minutes to each speaker, a large number of members expressing their views for and against the bill. No new arguments or facts were presented.

Mr. SHELLABARGER, who has charge of the bill, proposed that after today the debate shall be confined to amendments under the rules of the House, in five or ten-minute speeches, and that to-morrow at the close of the session he should ask that the House order the previous question.

Mr. BARRY, of Mississippi, showed the origin of the Kuklux organization, the members of which hoped for a Democratic victory in 1872. When it was proposed to put down the rebellion and to arm the colored men, the reply then as now was that such measures were unconstitutional. He believed that Gov. ALCORN was doing all he could to restore peace and order in that State. When that gentleman was inaugurated, a year ago, the State securities were 65; they were now 95 out of Mississippi, and at home they were at par.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

At the suggestion of Mr. DAWES the Deficiency bill, as returned from the Senate with amendments, was referred to four members of the House who were members of the Committee on Appropriations during the last Congress.

The Speaker designated as such Committee Messrs. DAWES, of Massachusetts, DICKEY, of Pennsylvania, NIBLACK, of Indiana, and BECK, of Kentucky.

LIVELY PASSAGE BETWEEN BUTLER AND SWANN.

Mr. BUTLER referred to the remarks of Mr. SWANN, of Maryland, recently made, in which the latter said that Mr. BUTLER might congratulate himself upon his empty triumphs, but his checks must tingle with shame, and he must feel as if every Yankee whom he met had his eyes on the Democratic side of the House and dared to claim the Democratic Party as his friends. We, said Mr. SWANN on that occasion, defy his malice as heartily as we spurn his friendship, and we calmly await the retribution which, sooner or later, must overtake him in his barbarous and vindictive war upon the unoffending South.

Mr. BUTLER said these remarks came from the Know-Nothing Mayor of Baltimore, by whose counsels a thousand defenseless men, women and children were killed, wounded or mutilated.

Mr. SWANN, rising, said with much earnestness—That is a slander. It comes from an irresponsible, politically and socially—

Mr. BUTLER—Were you not a Know-Nothing?

Mr. SWANN—I deny that I belonged to any association not patriotic and devoted to the support of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER—I can't yield any further to the gentleman.

Mr. SWANN—I deny that I belonged to any association formed for degrading innocent men, women, and children.

Mr. BUTLER—Do you deny that you were a Know-Nothing?

Mr. SWANN—I don't deny that I belonged to that organization.

Mr. BUTLER—My authority is no irresponsible person. I read from the Baltimore Gazette, a Democratic paper, which made the charge. That paper says that a thousand innocent men, women and children were murdered, wounded, or mutilated when the gentleman was made Mayor of Baltimore.

Mr. SWANN, again rising, said: In reply to that—

Mr. BUTLER—Interrupting—I can yield.

Mr. SWAN continued speaking, but his words were drowned in the calls to order.

Mr. BUTLER (resuming) said that gentleman could not go into the ordinary method of debate without personal attack and violence, because of their defense of the poor negro from Kuklux outrages. Those who make such attacks being the best specimens of the order and quiet of the South, what must it be with the worst? Those men think they are doing good service in lowering and palliating the Kuklux outrages; and the House was told these violations of law and acts of cruelty could not be put down, because the Constitution and laws were powerless for the purpose. They were thus told by gentlemen who went out of the House at the commencement of the rebellion, declaring that they had nothing more to do with the Constitution and the Government. Why did they, then, come back? They promised never to return.

A VOICE—We are sorry you did.

Mr. BUTLER, continuing—You swore to uphold and maintain the Constitution, and then swore you would not be bound by its provisions. Why revile us who stood by it in evil and in good report, and stood by it against your bullets and your guns. When we conquered you we allowed you your lives and liberties, which you had forfeited, and now abuse us because we stand by the negro, who knows more than his late master, because he knows how to be loyal. [Applause.]

Mr. SWANN rose, saying the member had made a personal attack upon him.

Mr. BUTLER wished to say a word.

Mr. SWANN remarked he could not yield the floor, and would say to the House that the information upon which the gentleman had been acting here in the assault made upon him (SWANN) and the State of Maryland, emanated from the organ of his own party—an organ that was represented by a man who was disloyal at the beginning of the war, reprimanded on many occasions for disclosing secrets of the Government, and who was arrested by the Secretary of War and confined in Fort McHenry for the same cause.

Mr. BUTLER—Not at all. I got it from the Baltimore Gazette, a Democratic paper.

Mr. SWANN—I have now to point the member to my record in the past. I have been connected with State affairs a quarter of a century. I have disbursed thirteen millions of dollars, and not one dollar has been retained in my hands. Could the member from Massachusetts say as much in the many relations in which he has been connected with the Treasury? The member from Massachusetts came to Baltimore during the war for the purpose of taking possession of the city. He came as a great military hero. He came without opposition to his triumphant march, and—cause like MARLBOROUGH or LOUIS NAPOLEON. He planted his standard on Federal Hill, and it was said he had his spurs fastened around his legs with his sword dangling at his boots. [Laughter.] He made his head-quarters at the Gilmore House. He was engaged in trying to degrade women and children I call on the member from Massachusetts to deny that after three days of revelry at the Gilmore House, of drunkenness enough to degrade any man, being in a state of beastly intoxication, he leaped on his horse, with the aid of sympathizing friends, in order that he might make a grand display through the streets of Baltimore; and yet the member has the audacity to stand up here and make an attack on me and the State of Maryland. I will tell him that I did belong to the American Party, in common with a distinguished man on the Republican side of the House, the late HENRY WINTER DAVIS. If I committed an error, and was young in politics, I was following the high priest of the Republican Party. I subscribed to no principle contrary to the Constitution and laws. I never engaged in the slaughter of women and children in the degradation of women and children. I'm above that. And when he charged this side with complicity in outrages and murder, and the Speaker of the House as being connected with land grants, I looked upon him with contempt. I could not withhold.

Mr. BUTLER said this course of personal calumny required only one word of reply. The recorded history of the country would show the utter falsity of the gentleman's charges. If I understand the gross assertion as to my going to the City of Baltimore, it was that when I went there in May, 1861, I stayed there three days and was drunk in somebody's house, and was then taken and put on my horse by sympathizing friends.

Mr. SWANN—I'm glad the member admits it.

Mr. BUTLER—And that is what they call ordinary gentlemanly treatment in Maryland. I am stating the gross charge. At sunset on the night of the 14th of May, in a thunder-storm, when the frightened gentleman from Maryland had gone into his house, I entered the city at the head of 15,000 men. A city of 260,000 inhabitants, more or less. On the following day I received a telegram appointing me a Major-General of Volunteers. I then left the city, never to go back again. For months and months—

Mr. SWANN—We hope never to see you there again.

[Gentlemen were standing all over the House, and much interest in the proceedings was manifested.]

Mr. BUTLER—I did not see the gentleman from Maryland. All that kind of cattle kept out of the way. [Laughter.] It took me only twenty-four hours to quell the rebels, and then I was sent somewhere else on the post of duty. It was a Know-Nothing, Plug-ugly, disgraceful mob. The gentleman from Maryland—he is entitled to be thus called by the courtesy of the House—talks about how much money he disbursed, and tells us none of it stuck to his fingers. But what do other people say? I have never found it necessary to deny the false slanders upon me. I am yet to hear that any officer of my Government has made any charge against me. No fault has been found by those who have a right to find fault. Judging me by their best standard of judgment, I suppose if my accusers had had the opportunity they would have stolen the public property. The devil cannot understand how devils would act. I am accused of degrading women and children in the City of Baltimore. I only regret I did not issue in Baltimore the same order I did in New-Orleans, copied from the London orders. This made every respectable woman act as respectable women, because respectable women had pride enough to appear as common women, while common women tried to appear respectable. The order was not made in secret, but in the face of the world. If there was anything in my life to be proud of, it was that order. It seemed almost like an inspiration to give an order that prevented bloodshed and the arrest of women and children in the street. One thing further, and you know I scarcely intrude my personal acts on the House. They best defend themselves. Let me say to the gentleman from Maryland and his associates that I live in a community where virtue and intelligence are much prized. I never held any office until I was appointed a Brigadier-General, when I was enabled to bring the associates of the gentleman from Maryland on their knees before me. I never held any other office but that of a representative of the people. I represent a people who know me, and who gave me with my re-election an increase of their confidence, is the best answer to the calumnies. WASHINGTON was denounced for founding this Republic. JACKSON was stigmatized in London as a tyrant. I have been attacked in the same way. Not precisely the same kind of men. Those who denounced WASHINGTON and JACKSON were English aristocrats, and those who denounced me are sneaking, stricken rebels, and the man who after being a Know-Nothing and endeavoring to destroy Catholic churches, had courted the Democrats, to come here as a representative from Baltimore.
